Congressmen push for equalized financial aid
by Mike Stewart
Staff writer

Idaho college students will soon be getting their fair share of federal financial aid. Proponents of an amendment to Idaho's congressional delegation proceed as planned.

The amendment, sponsored by U.S. Senators James McClure and Steve Symms, both Idaho Republicans, was prompted, in part, by inequities in the funding formula pointed out by Harry Davey, UI financial aid director.

Davey pointed out that federal financial aid, a state with approximately the same student and permanent populations as some Northeast states, was receiving less than half the amount of money those states were receiving from federal education funds.

At first, some members of Idaho's delegation were not convinced that any inequities existed in the system, and they questioned Davey's figures. However, Davey maintained that his figures were not wrong.

The major point of contention that had been raised by Symms' office was that it simply costs more to go to school in the northeast states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine than it does in Idaho.

Martha Solodky, McClure's assistant, however, supported Davey. She said, "There are inequities, Harry Davey is correct." She added that while it costs $2.5 percent more to go to school in Vermont, they are receiving two and a half times the amount of money that Idaho receives.

Presently, the money to fund higher education, 90 percent is allocated by a formula that, over the years, has evolved to heavily favor states in the Northeast. Solodky said. The other 10 percent is allocated at the discretion of the Secretary of Education Terrence Bell.

Idaho's delegation is now attempting to correct inequities in a couple of ways.

Solodky said the entire Idaho delegation has sent a letter to Secretary Bell asking that the discretionary funds at his disposal be immediately directed to Idaho to provide a short term solution. For the long term, she said that the delegation has asked Bell to compare the amounts of money states are receiving, and come up with some recommendations for a permanent solution.

Solodky added that within the next couple of weeks McClure's office would be drafting legislation directed toward providing a permanent solution and preventing the problem from recurring.

One of the ideas in the works for the new legislation would be to get rid of the 10 percent discretionary money that Secretary Bell controls and allocate all 100 percent of the money directly to the states.

Davey said he was pleased with the reaction of Idaho's legislators. He said "I think they've (Idaho's congressional delegation) concluded that yes, we have been taking it pretty hard out here in Idaho for the last eight or nine years. All that has to happen is to convince Secretary Bell that this is the right move."

In regard to the request made of Bell to immediately redirect more discretionary money to Idaho, Davey said he was optimistic about the future. "It could improve our position as soon as 1983-84," he concluded.

The Middle East: A war of insecurities
by Bill Bradshaw

The Middle East may be a long way from the Northwest, but some people who currently live here, most of whom are students either at the University of Idaho or at Washington State University, call that part of the world their home in which none of the residents have felt very secure.

Such is the case with UI students A.A. Masud and Imad Hasan, who are both Palestinians from the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

It is merely a restatement of history to note that for nearly 2,000 years the Jewish people were stateless and a persecuted minority. This situation has understandably produced a people who, even after achieving statehood, have been very insecure about their survival. Also, since the end of World War II with the revelation of the Nazi murder of 6 million Jews, and since the 1948 establishment of the State of Israel, the sympathy focus of the United States and most of the world has been primarily on the Jews.

The plight of the Palestinian refugees, however, has been largely ignored, and, especially in recent years, eclipsed by the worldwide terrorist activities of the Palestine Liberation Organization. But with the recent crises in Lebanon, particularly the massacre of hundreds of Palestinian civilians in Lebanon refugee camps by Lebanese Christians who have been closely allied with the Israelis, world attention and sympathy has been turned strongly in favor of the stateless Palestinian refugees.

Masud, 27, is from a small town near Nablus and has been in the United States since 1979. Although he and his family have managed to live in relative peace since the 1967 Israeli occupation of the West Bank, he said that the Israeli occupation forces made them feel in constant danger of harassment or imprisonment. Citing one instance, Masud told of how one of his brothers was held in a local jail for more than a month without being charged by the Israeli authorities.

He added that two of his brothers now live as refugees in Kuwait, but they, like Masud, hope to someday go home to an independent Palestine.

Hasan, 22, is also originally from a small town near Nablus, but has lived in Amman, Jordan since he was 4 years old. He said that although he has lived most of his life in Jordan, he still looks upon the West Bank as his home. In Jordan, Hasan said, he and his family were not integrated into Jordanian life enough to lose the feeling of being a refugee, and were not looked upon as locals, but merely as temporary residents.

When asked about the legitimacy of Israeli insecurity about their survival, Masud said that, considering the Israeli occupation of Arab territory and from his and his family's experiences with the occupation forces, "We feel more insecure than the Israelis."

Both he and Hasan said that ideally, the best solution to the conflict in the region would be the establishment of a multi-national and multi-religious state in Palestine. They defined Palestine as being an area which includes all of pre-1967 Israel, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Given the improbability of this, they said that they and most Palestinians would settle.
Thomas: higher education ‘gutted’

by Mike Borden
Staff writer

Higher education will have an advocate in the Idaho Legislature if Moscow Democrat Betty Thomas is successful in her bid to unseat incumbent James (Doc) Lucas, a Republican, in the November election.

Maintaining a quality university system in Idaho is the essential link in Thomas’ campaign platform. She describes adequate funding as the key to quality. “To have quality in higher education you’ve got to put money into it,” said Thomas. “You can’t have quality when you have to search for money to heat buildings.”

Thomas describes the university system as being “gutted” habitually by the Legislature. The solution, she says, lies in increasing revenue for funding higher education. Improving the tax collection system and broadening the tax base are the bases for improving a poor revenue situation.

According to Thomas, if the ability of the university to collect were to be enhanced, Idaho’s revenue would increase by $90 million a year. This can be accomplished by hiring more auditors, providing them with improved computer capability and increasing the penalty for late filing.

“Now it is economically beneficial for people to file late,” said Thomas. She explained that the penalties are now so low that a person can file late and invest the money at a higher rate of profit than the late penalty. Therefore, increasing the penalty would eliminate this advantage to late filing.

Higher ed number one priority for Lucas

by Andy Taylor
Staff writer

Support for higher education is the number one priority of incumbent state Representative James "Doc" Lucas and he said he has already proven his effectiveness in that capacity as a legislator.

Lucas, a Republican appointed to the position two years ago, is being challenged by Democratic candidate Betty Thomas for the District 5 seat in the Idaho House of Representatives.

"I'm the guy who was the ringleader against the fight for tuition last year in the Legislature," Lucas said in an Argonaut interview. "The tuition bill was considered a sure reality but we fought against it and won."

Another area of higher education which Lucas defended was public broadcasting. He said he led the charge to salvage KUID last year when it was scheduled for elimination. The television station was slated to be turned into a transmitting station as of July 1 of this year and would not have broadcast any of its own material. With his help, Lucas said the money allocated to the station went from the $95,000 it was budgeted last year to this year's allocation of $380,000, enough to preserve KUID's autonomy.

"By saving the television station we saved the entire curriculum of the communications department. Ask any communication student how important the station is to the college," he said.

The most pressing problem facing higher education in the next legislative session is finding ways to allocate more funds to higher education, he said.

"If the percentage of money allocated to higher education from the general fund shrinks or if the size of the general fund shrinks, funding problems for the university will become unbearable," he said.

Lucas is still against tuition as a means to generate money needed for higher education. He said tuition will exclude some students and would make education attainable only by the elite.

Lucas describes himself as a moderate Republican and said he believes strongly in local government; he said he'd like all taxes spent and collected at a local level.

"I don't know if you can stick to no tuition indefinitely because you can only allow the deterioration of higher education to go so far; but I stick to everything I said before," Lucas said.

According to Lucas, the best way to increase the budget for the university is by raising the amount of revenue in the general fund through a healthier economy, better tax collection, or raising some of those taxes.

"If taxes aren't raised, either the private economy must produce more or the public sector must produce more and these are valid hopes," Lucas said.

He said if the economy improves, the private sector will add more money to the general fund because of the increased tax revenues available. The economy is showing gradual signs of improving because interest rates are going down and the inflation rate is lowering, he said. The general fund can also be increased through better tax collection by the government.

"We think $80 million is available to the general fund just from people who aren't paying the taxes they owe. We hope we can get this money through better tax collection. The state hired about six auditors last year and the results have been tremendous so far."

If these two options don't generate enough funds, Lucas said he'd support a sales tax on services or a general sales tax increase. A sales tax on services would tax any service such as a haircut, a trip to the doctor or services performed by a veterinarian.

Lucas said he'd support a general sales tax increase even though it is regressive.

Lucas said he wouldn't support a property tax increase because it would be impossible to pass such a bill through the Legislature.

"There's no sense in shooting at a target that is out of range."

Is it a double feature?

Out to make a fast buck? You might try getting into the movie business if you're in need of a quick dollar. After all, you have to do is show a couple of flicks and sit back and rake in the greenbacks. That's what it looks like the ASUI Films people have done.

Last Friday the SUB Films Committee advertised a Heaven's Gate double header. The Treasure of the Sierra Madre, and The Maltese Falcon. Their ads in this newspaper called the program a "double feature" for the price of $1.50. Sounded like a deal, right?

Not so fast, Bogie fans. A little after 9 p.m. and the first film, the students running the ticket sales asked everyone to leave the theater. They said that if patrons wished to see the second feature they'd have to plunk down some more cash. Needless to say, most, if not all, members of the audience were outraged. A good many of the people who had paid their money in good faith to see two movies left. Another portion of the audience sighed and dug into their jeans for the money. One woman, angered by the deceptive advertising, took one of the hapless ticket-takers downtown to an Argonaut rack where she showed him the advertisement. With "double feature" staring him in the face, he had no choice but to let the remaining members of the original audience back in the theater without charging.

The reason the people were let back in the theater was the ad. SUB Films' intention (according to our information) was to charge two admissions. If ASUI Films actually intended to do this, they were quite with the few points: that they were going to charge extra, that same time each film would be shown and which film would be shown first. These all were ambiguous and how are we to sit in the first place. If people were let back in the theater it was because they allowed those who were deprived of the entertainment they'd paid for to see both pictures without fear of being ejected from the theater. If the committee bothers the involved, then perhaps they should look to their motives for bringing these films to the campus in the first place.

The whole situation was a mess, and a lot of people were cheated out of a movie. Since refunding money to cheated customers is out of the question, SUB Films ought to bring back both movies. They say that if patrons wished to see the second feature they'd have to plunk down some more cash. Needless to say, most, if not all, members of the audience were outraged. A good many of the people who had paid their money in good faith to see two movies left. Another portion of the audience sighed and dug into their jeans for the money. One woman, angered by the deceptive advertising, took one of the hapless ticket-takers downtown to an Argonaut rack where she showed him the advertisement. With "double feature" staring him in the face, he had no choice but to let the remaining members of the original audience back in the theater without charging.

The idea of the films committee trying to make money off a 35 year-old movie is questionable, especially considering the primitive conditions of the Boreah Theatre. The film series is a service of ASUI, not a revenue-generating project. Let's not confuse the two.

Student's best friend

Editor,

Tuesday's interview with Democratic candidate Mike Mitchell gave students a good perspective of his plans to be an effective Lieutenant Governor for the state. As students, however, we should be especially aware of the tremendous accommodation these twelve-year legislative leaders have made in the area of education.

During the past legislative session Sen. Mitchell, as a member of the Joint Finance and Appropriations Committee, fought hard to secure funding for the state's public television stations and promotes greater localized broadcasting from KUID-TV. Mitchell believes education is an opportunity not a privilege, therefore he opposes any attempt to reduce tuition at the U of I. Both in 1979 and 1981 he helped defeat an attempt to close LCSC. For students interested in the operation of state government Mike Mitchell sponsored legislation making unemployment insurable. He was the Senate floor sponsor for the Displaced Homemakers Act, a measure endorsed by the ASUI Senate. And of lesser fame Sen. Mitchell was responsible for the salubrity of wine in Idaho grocery stores. Something for everyone.

With over 70 percent of the college-educated population the support from an experienced and suc- cessful candidate for the future is essential.

As a state senator Mike Mitchell has been the best friend students could ask for. As a state officer he will compound his support.

West meets East

Editor,

I attended the University of Idaho for five semesters. I transferred to a prestigious East Coast school where the tuition was over 10 times the UI's student fees. I thought I would be getting a second chance at education and would be coming to a more liberal Eastern school and getting one of the "best educations in the world." I have been here three semesters now and would like to share my comparison of the two schools with you.

My professors here are some of the most famous men in the world. Some have worked for various world leaders, some have made great discoveries, others have designed incredible widgets. However, they are not better teachers than the professors at Idaho. My prestigious professors do not know the fundamental concepts, which I need to learn, any better. They are not better communicators. Moreover, these famous professors generally have no idea what their students are doing. My Idaho professors were much more accessible. I thank them for their time.

I felt rather frustrated with the UI bureaucracy. Well, it is no better at this "Ivy League type" school. Idaho has the same amount of paperwork, but they charge much less for it!

The East may have some liberal schools and professors, but they don't care about their students. These preppies are just as conservative as you Idahoans. Not that it is good or bad just not what I expected.

What about partying (the subject closest to your hearts?) You are, on the whole, the best partiers I have ever seen. I don't just mean quantity I mean quality. Idaho partiers had more enthusiasm, more imagination and were more fun than the parties of any other campus I have seen.

Finally, stop a minute to look around campus and the town of Moscow. Appreciate those big old trees on the Ad lawn, the lawn in front of the East of the Chemistry building, the Student Union, the convenience and quaintness of Main Street. I think the University of Idaho campus is nicer than you realize.

100% against

Editor,

The current week's Argonaut contained a letter to the editor by a writer who, for apparent political reasons, misrepresented my position on gun control.

I have always been 100 percent against gun control legislation of any kind.

I regret that the Argonaut's readers were subjected to such deliberate and erroneous misinformation.

Lend an ear

Editor,

Roger Thurston's plea for responsibility in politicking during this upcoming election is well taken. How candidates handle themselves during an election campaign is a good indication of how that individual will handle himself in office. After watching this congressional campaign over the summer I find myself wondering why anybody would want to vote for Larry LaRocco over our experienced, mature state senator. While Larry Craig's campaign has been one of "responsibility" and fairness, LaRocco has repeatedly fabricated headlines of an underhanded nature.

Roger, in your letter you state, "What the people need to hear are the facts. Well, lend me your ear.

In the August 4th issue of the Idahoan Larry LaRocco is quoted in an interview as being "critical of Craig's silence on the nuclear arms freeze question." Critical of what silence? In April of this year Larry Craig co-sponsored the Bi-Partisan Nuclear Weapons Reduction Resolution which called for a "long term and mutual and verifiable nuclear forces freeze at equal and sharply reduced levels of force." In an interview with the Idahoan on April 9th, 1982, Craig talked about the resolution and his support of it. Then again on June 1, 1982, another Idahoan interview stated Craig's feelings on the issue.

One can hardly say that Craig is silenced on this very important issue. It may be that Larry LaRocco has learned a thing or two from his campaign foe NPOC. The list of nonresponsible politicians goes on. I can only supply one example here.

Oh say can you see?

Editor,

After spending two years in a foreign country, I returned to the United States to find what I thought was widespread apathy in regards to our country. All I could hear was how wonderful our country is and how irritating to see people acting in complete disregard of the things that make America great. (I realize that we all have our problems but we are in much better shape than many countries.)

However, Saturday evening something very exciting happened and all who were present experienced something that I thought was special. While the National Anthem was being sung, the microphone went dead. Suddenly, the Dene was filled with the voices of the spectators who filled in for the soloist. I then realized that there are still those who love the words and even more, aren't afraid to sing them. To these people I give my thanks for making a football game much more than just a game.

A right to live

Editor,

On Israeli hands is the blood of the thousands of raped, tortured and massacred Palestinians. Perhaps I should be used to this by now. In an interview with the New York Times a young Palestinian expressed his hatred and brutality was so blatant it's shocking. They used to be smoky and cunning and operate under the cover of night hiding their murders and atrocities in the shadow of world events in other places. But now in the face of all they have gotten away with in Beirut its invasion, burning civilians, shootings at American military personnel they've become arrogant.

The Israelis are directly and 100 percent responsible for the massacre at the refugee camps. First of all, the only reason that there are Palestinians in camps is because the Israelis stole our land, occupy Palestinian homes and farm Palestinian soil.

Begin claims no responsibility because Israeli fingers did not pull the triggers. But Israeli soldiers watched as our women were tied and raped, as our children were lined up beside their fathers and shot, as the wounded and maimed (wounded and maimed by Israeli soldiers) were thrown from hospital beds and murdered.

The world is in agreement: the vicious and unforgivable. But I cannot wash it's hands of this and pretend to be innocent. And the United States can no longer turn a blind eye to Israel's aggression and continue to support their savage hatred of Palestinians by giving billions of dollars in weapons and foreign aid.

We are human beings and we have a right to live!

What was that?

Editor,

I saw my first two football games at the University of Idaho this month. They comprised about one third of all the football games I've seen in my young life. While I'm beginning to get a grasp of what's going on during the game, I'm completely lost at halftime.

The announcer introduced the UI Marching Band as one of the finest in the country. I don't know how he could tell in the echo chamber of our beloved many-roofed drippy dome. Or they marched in a blur of sound and began making about the astro turf in wondrously synchronized random movement. My first impression was that they were forming the Greek letters of a fraternity or sorority. "Look," I breathed in awe to my friend, "he's spelling Sigma Nu." But suddenly the N became a spiral with a blob-like amoeba on one end.

My wonderment increased when six women carrying what appeared to be giant white crayola crayons, with wrappers intact and tinsel tasseling from both ends of their bodies, began marching in circles in front of themselves and some other women. At this point we surmised they were giving emergency instructions to the wayward tubas and that at least I had been back on course. I a great 'U' of 'Hi' Mum' would emerge in black and gold against the green field. But instead the trombones and trumpets started a slow charge toward the drums and cymbals while the crayons and flags wandered off. I admired the drums and cymbals. I turned in frustration to my friend who shrugged his shoulders and tried to catch a souvenier of Kibbie road water in his $1 plastic UI pep cup.

"But aren't they going to do something this time," I yelled, but the high whiny voice that extreme disappointment inflicted upon me. After all, tonight's performance was dedicated to the Idaho Forest Industry. How about a chainsaw with a moving chain? Would a big tree slowly topple over just to ask? A simple "How's it going Woody Owl? Evidently anything this comprehensible was out of the question. The drums and cymbals continued to chase and weave around in undulating waves while the assembled uniforms were causing a definite, case of seasickness.

I get enough abstract meaningless forms and shapes from the graphs of my calculus equations. When I come to a football game to be entertained, is it too old-fashioned of me to want clearly recognizable designs and no hieroglyphs?

Power outage zaps campus

The University of Idaho campus was without electrical power during two periods Sunday while power lines to the new engineering building at Sixth Street and Perimeter Drive were being hooked up and disconnected.

The first power outage came at 9:10 a.m. Power was cut in order to switch the campus to a temporary 13,000 volt line while hook-ups were made at the site of the new building. The second outage, at about 3:30 p.m. came when the power was switched from the temporary to the permanent line. Both outages had been scheduled in advance according to Ed Stahs, assistant director of the Physical Plant.

While the entire campus, with the exception of the agricultural farm areas, were affected by the temporary outages, some areas of the campus were without power for most of the day. These areas, however, were in the immediate vicinity of the building site.

Some electrical work at the construction site is not finished and there are some minor outages planned for the future, but there is only a very limited area.

Vandal defense becomes recurring nightmare for PSU

by Kevin Warnock
Sports Editor

From Portland State's perspective, not much has changed in the Idaho football program in the last year. Except defensively, perhaps, where the Vandals improved enough to shutout the Vikings 56-0 Saturday night after 11,000 in the Kiddie Dome.

As was the case one season ago when the Vandals and running back Russell Davis ran over the Vikes 56-0, this matchup was decided early. Portland State was in control of their offense touched the ball. Given the ball at the Vandal four-yard line over the UI volleyball coaching spot six years ago, the team's stature has changed dramatically.

"When I came here six years ago that, we were some overweight girls and some who smoked," said Burk. "There's no way you can field a team like that. I wanted to have the girls devote more time to the game, instead of just three hours at practice like they used to."

Devoting a lot of time is something Burk is used to. Beginning with her high school career at Robert E. Lee High School, Burk was named captain of her team, but unlike most career stories, the team didn't go on to win the state, league or national titles.

"Volleyball was kind of low-key back in the sixties," said Burk. "Our team did fairly well and had a lot of tough competition. I guess that is where I learned that you have to work hard to be winners."

Burk has tried to set that example for her players. They follow a lot of the same training exercises and diet. Volleyball is an extracurricular sport, it should be given attention right along with academics.

"Sometimes the girls come home wasted from a practice or a game." Burk said. "But we have a few people on the team that go around and make sure that all the girls are on study table and are putting some effort into their studies."

A typical day at practice for a player consists of going to classes, lifting weights, and running. After that, it's onto the Memorial Gym floor for the daily volleyball workout. Then the women move into the

Although she looks like a general commanding a military unit, her personality is that of a friendly civilian, with a slight Texas accent and warm personality. But since Burk has the personal touch that is a part of every assistant coach for any successful team.

"I've been around the block a few times in high school, if you were a jock you didn't say much about it," Burk said. "But now it is different. The overview of how much women on the team feel is that they are proud to be athletes because they have worked for it. I try to teach them self-assertiveness."

Burk has shown her assertiveness by how rapidly she has risen in the women's sports field. She played four years of volleyball at Texas Christian University and then transferred to Washington State University to work on her master's degree in physical education. From there she went seven miles to Idaho and was named head coach after some home time as an assistant.

"I did change a few things when I got to be the head coach," Burk said. "I taught the players to be dedicated to volleyball, but I am still interested in their academics. I also realize that the players need some time to socialize, but there is plenty of time for that in the off-season."

Under Burk, the Vandals have advanced all the way to the Division II finals, which they did last season. But this year Idaho has moved into a new league and to Division I, which means competing against big schools like Ohio State, USC and the other marauders. How does that affect Burk? "What we're accomplishing here is really good," Burk said. "We're changing who we play now and the competition will be a lot tougher. We want to play well against all the big schools. Our conference (Mountain West Athletic Conference) should be really tough. But I think we will finish in the top four teams somewhere, and you can bet that it won't be easy for any team to run away with the title."
percent for the season as he has now completed 48 of 94 attempts for 52 percent.

Knudsen was three of seven for 55 yards and a TD, while Linehan was two of four for 34 yards.

Eight receivers nabbed passes, with Wally Jones and Ron Wittenburg catching four apiece. Jones for 61 yards and Wittenburg for 52. Wittenburg made Idaho's catch of the season thus far when he snagged a 13-yard TD pass from Hobart in the second quarter to give the Vandals a three-touchdown lead.

"I saw the safety coming up so I had to throw it where it wouldn't get picked off," said Hobart who was as surprised as the 11,000 in attendance to see Wittenburg come up with the ball in the end zone. "It was a remarkable catch."

On Idaho's previous drive, it was Curtis Johnson who brought down a Hobart lob for the Vandals' first TD.

Kerry Hickey,

Hickey, who pulled a hamstring scoring Idaho's first points. As of Sunday night, Hickey's status was still uncertain. He was on crutches after the game.

For all of the Vandals' explosiveness on offense, it was an overwhelming defensive effort which plagued Portland State into committing turnovers and punting situations.

The Vikings lost four fumbles and an interception, then had to watch the Idaho special teams, primarily through the talents of Wallace, pile up large amounts of return yardage. Wallace went 42 yards on a punt return for a score to give the Vandals a 49-0 lead in the third quarter.

Assessing his team after three games, Erickson said "To be very honest, we're where I'd like us to be, but we have to keep playing with intensity.

Harvey leads NROTC Run

Ideal running conditions persisted throughout last Saturday's Fifth Annual "Go to Health" Fun Run, sponsored by the University of Idaho Naval ROTC, which was held under second-year Capt. Rick Johnson's direction. The event attracted a larger than anticipated number of entrants, with Idaho varsity theselves Andy Harvey and Sherrie Cragg leading the way. Harvey placed first with a 40:12 timing and Cragg led the women with a mark of 48:13, good enough for 18th place overall. Both Harvey and Cragg were in the 15-29 age group.

Other group winners included Ron Barker and Gayle Byers in the 30-39 category, Allan Hodgson and Molly Stock in the 40-49 set, Don Keane in the 50 and over group, Rick Kim in 14-17 and Tom Davis and Krysten Loney in the under 14 category.

Harvey outdistanced his nearest competitor by over 2.5 minutes. Finishing second was Todd Lindvigen at 42:46, third was John Olson at 42:46, Barker was fourth and Karl Goetzinger was fifth in 42:46.

Race coordinator Stu Johnson said the event was a successful one, with good road conditions and a good field. "We had some interesting matchups throughout. For instance, Homer Jones, a captain in the U.S. Marine Corps, edged liberal political science professor Al Rouver by just one second," Johnson said. "For those two to come that close is almost ironic."

The Navy ROTC unit donated any profits from the run to Moscow Parks and Recreation.

Volleyball plays Whitworth

The Idaho women's volleyball team staved off Whitworth College, 3-2, Friday night at 7:30 at the Memorial Gym, winning their record to 7-2.

Idaho now prepares to take on Whitworth, a team they beat earlier in the season. The Vandals' second win of the season over Whitworth and improved their record to 7-2.

"That's so typical of a volleyball match," Burk said about the 15-2 match clinching victory over the Cougars. "The game went back-and-forth the whole way. I am glad I got to play a lot of people, but the match was won in the last game when we grabbed the momentum."

17-3 Warwick wins $25 Tri-State gift

The results are in and a winner has been declared in the first-ever Argonaut-Tri-State College Football Pick the Winners Contest.

The winner of the $25 gift certificate from Tri-State was Don Warwick, a 47 year-old University of Idaho data processing sectional manager. Warwick, who tied with two other people, Albert Allen and Martha Kaisaki, correctly predicted 17 of the 20 games and then won the tie-breaker by guessing that Idaho would beat Portland State by 14 points. Although that prediction was far short of the Vandals’ 56-0 blowout, it was closer than both Allen’s 1-point margin and Kaisaki’s 12-point guesses.

“I just saw the contest and thought I had better enter it,” Warwick said. “I predicted all the college games in the (Lewiston) Tribune forecast, but I missed on all of the local high school games.”

Warwick, Kaisaki and Allen all did better than this week’s Argonaut expert panels. Leading the way so far is sports editor Kevin Warnock with a 14-4 record, followed closely by sports writer Bruce Smith who correctly predicted 15 of the games. Guest panelist, Athletic Director Bill Belknap, was third with a 14-6 mark and copy editor Brian Beesley mopped up fourth with a 12-8 record.

The games that gave the 85 entries the most trouble seemed to be Cal Poly-SLO’s 15-13 win over Idaho State, Montana State’s 17-10 win over Nevada-Reno, Stanford’s 21-20 comeback thriller of Ohio State and unheralded Delta State’s 62-10 thrashing over favored Southeast Mis-gouri. Both Delta State and Southeast Missouri are common opponents of Northern Iowa, which Idaho plays Oct. 23.

This week’s assorted games include Notre Dame at Michigan State, West Virginia at Pittsburgh, Ohio State at Florida State, Nebraska at Auburn, and Idaho’s homecoming clash with Weber State Saturday afternoon.

Army students learn rope tricks for survival

Ropes can be invaluable survival tools in the wilderness. Army ROTC students learned Saturday on the Laramie Range Wednesday that they used to transport themselves, equipment and supplies across streams to reach the base of a cliff and "rescue" people.

About 80 students took part in the day-long adventure training course at Laramie Park, about 45 miles northeast of Moscow. The exercise was set up by Raiders, a group of ROTC students who are "super-dedicated" to the type of survival training done Saturday, according to Maj. Warren Mills, assistant professor of Military Science.

The first exercise was the suspension traverse, which is used to transport people and equipment across a canyon or ravine when the river at the bottom is impassable. A rope is strung from one side of the canyon to the other.

"We can move boxes, lockers, and personnel across an impassable ravine," said Scott Veibell, a senior ROTC student.

Rappelling, or bungee jumping, the other side of a cliff at the end of a rope, is based on the same principles as the suspension traverse.

Starting at the face of the cliff, students would get instructions from the upper portions and then slowly work their way down.

"Get your butt down!"—a student would yell, and carefully the person rappelling would straighten his legs and lower himself to a more horizontal position with the ground.

Rappelling is a versatile means of rope transportation and can be used on sheer cliffs, hanging areas or mountains too steep to walk down.

"If a person slips or becomes unconscious, the person at the bottom has control," Veibell explained.

There were two rappelling lines set up and the students demonstrated how much more effective the two lines were.

"With two rappels, you can rescue people, and injured people can be let down safely, but we do it for fun," Veibell said.

The day also included a class called "Incredible Edibles," taught by Dr. Rich Old, an ethnobotany instructor at the University of Washington State University. Students learned some tips on edible plants and roots that can be used to remove rust from knives, combat hair and make a soap-lather.

Mills credited the group of Raiders with the help of some seniors in putting the program together.

"It was a chance for them (the Raiders) to show other students what they do and how much fun it can be."
