Origin of "Vandal"
Related by Big Time Newspaper Writer

By ERNEST LINDSEY
Washington Correspondent of The New York Herald Tribune

All history, past and present, was just so much stuff to be read and reread by the students of the University of Idaho at Moscow as they perused the pages of the Idaho Argonaut, the campus newspaper. The page they were reading on Saturday, September 29, 1934, was of particular interest to them, for it contained the origin of the periodical's most famous column, "Vandal," written by Big Time Newspaper Writer

"Vandal" was first published on November 21, 1913, in the Idaho Statesman, a local newspaper. The column was created by a student named Walter R. Ingersoll, who was known for his wit and sharp wit. The column quickly gained popularity among the students of the University of Idaho, and it soon became a fixture of campus life.

Ingersoll's column was a satirical look at the university and its students, and it was often辛辣地攻击 the administration and its policies. The column's success was due in part to its ability to make fun of the university's traditions and its students, but it was also due to the quality of Ingersoll's writing.

"Vandal" was passed down through the years, with each writer adding their own unique spin to the column. By the time it was handed off to Big Time Newspaper Writer, the column had become a beloved tradition of the university, and it was widely read by students and faculty alike.

Big Time Newspaper Writer picked up where Ingersoll left off, and he continued to write the column with the same wit and humor. His writing was often irreverent, and he was not afraid to speak his mind, even if it meant offending the university's administration.

"Vandal" ran until 1934, when Big Time Newspaper Writer was replaced by another student. But the column's legacy lived on, and it continues to be a beloved tradition of the University of Idaho to this day.

Gallup Tintypes

At the time, the Gallup Tintype was a popular trend among students, and it was a way for them to showcase their creativity and individuality. The tintype was a type of photography that was developed in the 19th century, and it was known for its rich, deep colors and the ability to capture the details of a subject's face.

"Gallup Tintypes" was the name of a student-run photography studio that was located on campus. It was run by a group of students who were passionate about photography and who wanted to provide a service to their fellow students.

The studio was open to anyone, and it was a place where students could come to have their portraits taken, or to have their own photographs developed and printed.

The studio was a popular place on campus, and it quickly became a hub of activity for students who were interested in photography. It was a place where they could meet and share their ideas, and it was a place where they could learn from each other.

"Gallup Tintypes" was a beloved tradition of the University of Idaho, and it continued to be a popular place on campus until it was closed in 1934. But the memories and the memories of the students who worked there lived on, and they continue to be a source of pride for the University of Idaho today.

The leaves of Turkish tobacco are strong; one can see the veins in the picture. After the leaves are strong they are packed in boxes, sometimes as many as 80,000 leaves in a box.

We have on hand at all times for CHESTERFIELD cigarettes upwards of 350,000 bales of Turkish tobacco...

The pleasing aroma and flavor of Turkish tobacco is almost necessary if you want a really fine cigarette. Turkish tobacco is more costly when you take into account that you have to pay 35c a pound duty, but we have to have it to blend with our mild home-grown tobaccos. It helps make Chesterfield milder, it helps give them better taste. Just try them.
