Regents: Board will consider tuition, holdback

By Douglas Jones
Of the Argonaut

The UI Board of Regents/State Board of Education will hold its monthly meeting this Thursday and Friday in Coeur d'Alene. Many items to be considered include a proposal to change the law to define tuition, a review of alternatives for dealing with the FY86 2.5 percent budget holdback, and a review of the goals of its proposed statewide five-year plan.

Other items include consideration of recommendations by the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges on the board's policies and organization.

Thursday the board will consider passing on to the state legislature a request that tuition be defined as "the fee for the cost of instruction at the college and universities." The proposal goes on to say that "the cost of instruction shall not include...research, public service, maintenance and operations of physical plant, academic support, student services and institutional support."

The proposal, if passed into law, would protect the board from legal action by students who might claim that the institutional Maintenance Fee charged to each student is being used for areas traditionally considered to be tuition.

Enrollment drops ASUI budget cuts

By Joe Hecht
Of the Argonaut

The present financial crisis to face student government is an old one: revenue now is far behind what it was expected to be. ASU President Jane Freund said in a recent release. The proposed ASUI surplus of $92,000 must be spent before the budget is approved in Spring 1986.

My first reaction was, "That's still incomplete." My second reaction was, "What if I have to keep trying?"

Faculty to change incompletes policy

By Lowell Darnow
Of the Argonaut

Through a loophole in UI policy, some people have received degree even though they did not have the required minimum grade-point average of 2.0.

Today the Faculty Council will consider a change in university policy that will close the loophole. The council meets at 3:30 p.m. in Brink Hall faculty lounge.

The loophole is found in regulation F-3, which concerns "incomplete" grades received at the end of a student's final term. Under current policy, this is how a student can bypass the 2.0 requirement: Joe Student is graduating with a 2.0 GPA and two incompletes. One incomplete is in a required course; the other is in an elective. Under the current policy, Joe's incomplete in the required course will revert to the grade the instructor has specified on his class roster. Assuming that grade is a C, Joe can graduate with a 2.0 GPA. But that incomplete in the elective is still on his record.

He has six weeks to make up the incomplete. If he doesn't make it up, it reverts back to the grade specified by the instructor. Let's say Joe does re-enroll in school, after graduating. His incomplete is still incomplete, so the instructor gives him a D, which brings his overall GPA down below a 2.0.

Bruce Bray, faculty secretary, said this embarrasses the university because it has awarded an incomplete degree to someone who did not meet its minimum requirements.

Under the proposed revision of regulation F-3, "incompletes" in all classes, required or elective, would revert at the time of the degree, before students would come back to the UI to complete the course work and raise their grades for the permanent record.

The change was proposed by the Graduate Council and the University Curriculum Committee.

Senators plan for election

By Megen Guido
Of the Argonaut

Students may be seeing some new faces on the ASUI Senate next semester as six senators' posts are open for election. The current senators in those posts are Kelli Kast, Rich Kuck, Larisa DeKlotz, Kell Patton, Larry Seid and Scott Speelman.

Three of these senators are not running for reelection. They are Kuck, Patton and DeKlotz. All three said they chose not to run again because they were short of time.

Kuck said, "I'm in my first year of law school. I really don't have the time to put into it like I should."

DeKlotz said, "I would like to run again if I didn't have to go to school."

Senators Speelman and Seid and Vice President Mike Trail are undecided whether they will run again.

"We've got a career to worry about and a marriage," said Speelman. "The way it's been going this semester it's just been a waste of time. We'll see how it goes in the end."

The president's position is also up for election and President Jane Freund does not plan to run again. She will continue to run the ASI (Associated Students of Idaho) Chair and be a member of the Parking Committee. She said she will be working on putting together an ASUI handbook. "I will have completed an eleventh semester in the ASUI. I've got some knowledge that I'd like to pass down and give to the next senate."

Senator Kelli Kast, who is running for re-election, said, "At this time, I'm just seeking a senatorship. I'm not positive of my aspirations as far as the upper offices are concerned."

Petitions for candidacy for senate, vice president and president will be available Oct. 23 in the UI office. Anyone can apply. Petitions are due back in the ASUI office Nov. 6. "A political background is beneficial but not required to run," Freund said.

The election is Nov. 20.
Fresenius has problems called

Fresenius doing below average were called six work to meet with advisors in conjunction with a new academic program introduced this semester.

Any freshmen receiving D's or F's in two or more core classes were reported to the registrar and will meet with advisors to discuss their study habits, said George Simmons, UI assistant vice president for academic affairs.

Attendance is also being monitored in core classes, he said.

Advisors will discuss with the students class attendance, studyng environment, choice of major, organizing time well or any topic the students want to talk about, he said.

"I hope we can discuss some of the issues that students need help with," said Simmons. "We need to catch problems early."

The program was devised in an effort to decrease the number of students that leave campus after the first year, he said.

"There is a state wide awareness of the need to retain students," Simmons said.

To meet the need of retaining students the assistant deans of departments at the UI met and designed the current program.

"If we can find out right now what students are having difficulties with then we have a better chance for success later," he said.

Simmons said that one out of ten freshmen across the U.S. do not enter into their second semester of college.

During the sophomore year one out of three students do not return to college, he said.

The UI is not content with being average," Simmons said. "We want to be better."

"We are hoping we can create or improve an environment where people can succeed.

International jobs discussed

A representative from the American Graduate School of International Management will be speaking about career opportunities in the field of international business this week.

Carol Hazelett, a recruiter from the school, will be lecturing at a public meeting of the United Language and Culture Association (ULCA) next week and will give a brief lecture about her school and the programs they offer.

The meeting will be held Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in Room 30 of the Administration Building.

The school, which is widely recognized as being one of the best in the country, is located in Glendale, AZ, and offers a degree of Master of International Management.

Students with specific interests in attending the school can sign up for interviews through the Placement Center.
Interviews will be conducted on its list of November placement interviews.

The drawing for sign ups began Thursday and continues throughout today. November meet-center starting at 8 a.m. at the center.

Early arrival is encouraged and will not be acknowledged in the drawing process.

The numbers reserve
30-minute periods between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. each day.

During the periods, Nov interviews will be interviews by presenting their profiles.

Each student can sign up for only four interviews. Starting at 8 a.m. Oct. 17, students can sign up for additional interviews on an Opportunity basis.

Arrowsmith
visits Moscow

This Thursday evening, students, faculty and area residents will be offered the opportunity to attend a free public lecture entitled, "On Translating Americanian Drama," by Professor William Arrowsmith.

The lecture begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Law School courtroom.

Arrowsmith is a professor of classics and comparative literature at Emory University in Atlanta. He is the second speaker in the program of visiting colleges and universities Humanities Core Curriculum, a series sponsored by the UI and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

In addition to his lecture, he will also be teaching in various classes throughout his stay.

Arrowsmith, who is a widely recognized scholar in the field of translating classical writings, received his bachelor's degree and doctorate from Princeton and both a bachelor's and master's degree from Oxford University.

His current work includes translating "Cyclusps" and "Medea," two works of Euripides, and collecting and annotating speeches of American Indian literature.

Arrowsmith has made waves in the field by taking the position that his colleagues should reunite classical literature with its historical context and philosophy.

UI officials say that if the cuts were imposed across-the-board, it would cost the university about $1.27 million, but under the provisions the UI's share would be no more than $1.22 million.

The board will also review the first three of the five goals of the Five-year Plan for Higher Education.

The plan, which was presented to the board this summer, has recently come under attack by the UI Faculty Council.

The council, in a resolution passed three weeks ago, said that the plan overemphasizes the negative aspects of the current economy, ignores the need for and the desirability of faculty and student participation in decision making, and would lower the quality of education at the university.

The board will also consider the Personnel/Administrative Committee's recommendations on the Northwester.

Yugoslavian wants to stay in Moscow

By Richard Burke
Of the Argonaut

"It was about 10 p.m. when we saw the flashing lights of the Italian police car behind us. Although we hadn't done anything, we decided that we should stop anyway. Two policemen got out of their vehicle and surrounded our car, pointing their machine guns at us through the glass. We were frozen with fear as we rolled down the windows to talk to them. But when they found out that we were foreigners, and that we couldn't understand each other, they let us go."

That story is one of the many experiences of Boris Andres, a European traveler and English instructor turned student who is currently attending the UI.

Andres has seen more of the world in his 20 years than many people do in a lifetime.

He was born and raised in Yugoslavia, where he attended a high school that specialized in legal studies. In addition to his regular English language curriculum offered at public school, Andres also received private instruction for eight years.

After he graduated from high school, he set out to travel and experience Europe and the Americas.

His travels took him first to Hungary, Austria, and Bulgaria before ending up in Istanbul, Turkey. "You can feel the difference when you are in an 'Eastern Bloc' country. The people are kind and very generous to foreigners, but at the same time they are very cautious of outsiders," said Andres.

When he got to Turkey, he decided to put his eight years of English courses to work for him and started teaching English at a private American school. At the age of 19, most of his students were older than he was. "It was a bit awkward, but I got used to it," said Andres.

While in Istanbul, Andres was aware of many foreigners in the jails. "It was a lot like the movie Midnight Express in that a lot of people are arrested for drug trafficking. There is a lot of crime there, but it seems to be mostly non-violent (theft, drugs, etc.)."

After teaching in Istanbul for five months, he decided that it was time to move on. Heading first to Greece, then on to Italy, Austria, Germany, Belgium and France, he ended up in England. He stopped in London and decided to "settle down for a while and start working again."

"This time however, he worked in an electrical repair service crew."

After talking with friends and fellow travelers, he decided that his next destination would be the United States. "I had heard that the northwest United States was a beautiful area, so I made up my mind to go there."

His first application was to the UI, and after being accepted, he applied for his student visa.

"I had to get away from all the crowds of Europe. I wanted to go to Idaho as my first choice," said Andres.

Now that he is here, he is glad that he made the choice to come to Idaho. "After only a short while, I have been amazed with the hospitality, kindness and good nature of the people of Moscow. I would very much like to stay here and become a part of this great community."

He was born in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, and lived there for 18 years before starting his travels of the world. Zagreb is the capital of Croatia, one of six republics in Yugoslavia. (much like our states). Its one million inhabitants make it the second largest city in Yugoslavia.

His native Yugoslavia is neither an "Eastern Bloc" ("Iron Curtain"), nor a "Western Bloc" country.

Although it was once divided by the pact signed by Franklin D. Roosevelt and Joseph Stalin in 1945, the nationalization accomplished by President Tito merged the two areas and the independent sovereign nations (with diplomatic ties to both the

It's an ill wind

The winds of tuition are blowing in Idaho again.

And the hottest air is coming from so-called conservatives who wish to change Idaho's century-long policy of tuition-free higher education.

Our forefathers specified this policy in the UI's Charter. The Idaho Supreme Court reaffirmed the charter in 1943. The Legislature made it statutory when it created LCSC and finallyisu.

The obvious and laudable intent was to ensure a college education would be affordable for as many Idahoans as possible. Idaho does not need, nor can it afford to charge in-state tuition.

The ban against tuition was intended to permanently establish a minimal-cost opportunity for citizens to gain from a college education the wisdom and skills needed to become productive members of the Idaho community.

State Rep. Christopher Hooper (R-Boise) recently wrote a letter to the Idaho Argonaut saying he was "disappointed" this newspaper refused to consider tuition征收. He said he had hoped to help solve the state's higher education problems.

There is no doubt these problems are financial.

Hooper, who is attending the UI College of Law, implied the problems of quality (real or perceived) at Idaho universities is caused in part by the "fact" students do not help with the funding of the schools.

This implication is of course incorrect. Fees have more than doubled in the last five years. Most of this money has been used to support programs and expenditures which otherwise would have to be cut back. If tuition was legal, it would be levied to fund these same areas, and more.

But these fee increases have not produced a net gain for students. Instead they have instituted the constant-dollar decreases in legislative appropriations.

This is the root of the problem: diminished state support for higher education, primarily because of the ultra-conservatives in the legislature, led by House Speaker Thelma Stivers (R-Twin Falls) and Senate President James Risch (R-Boise).

Hooper, who is considered a moderate and intelligent representative, should understand this better than anyone. He has pointed heads more than a few times with that same attention that he has valued for the future.

He also should know this problem should not and cannot be solved by tampering with Idaho's Constitution.

The Constitution does allow tuition to be charged to residents in some cases, i.e. "...in a professional department, and for extra studies." Although there is apparently no legal interpretation of this phrase, professions are often defined as those fields which require college degrees and a certificate from the state.

This could include such fields as education, engineering, architecture, and of course, law. Currently, law students are paying tuition ("extra studies") but only $120 — same as other graduate students — more a semester than undergraduates.

The Constitution benefits the individual who becomes better prepared to function in an increasingly complex society. The state benefits by having a more highly educated populace, an imperative if democracy is to prevail. In addition, state revenues increase because college graduates generally receive higher salaries, and ultimately pay more taxes.

The solution lays not in changing Idaho's Constitution, but in having the Legislature renew its commitment to higher education. The Idaho voters must elect officials who will support this long-term investment in the future. This is what higher education is: an investment in the well-being of the state.

If charity begins at home, then politics is forged at the hearth. What can Afghanistan or El Salvador or Grenada or Lebanon mean if you're impassioned about Love Canal and AIDS victims, and educated nation, or the elderly having to eat their heating bills? Foreign places are only an exotic drumroll to rally 'round the flag, having nothing to do with the miracle you can't face the mirror in your own homeland.

It is just too convenient to purify our frustrations and animosities toward some caricatured abstraction of "the enemy." It is too secure to be enraged by the papers and TV tapes which generate those fist-shaking arguments in the classroom, coffee lounge or local pub. And it is very, very difficult to work through our personal relationships and individual psyches, and see the world reflected there.

Face to nose. Zit to tear. Stare. That's how concepts like "freedom" and "terrorism" cease to be the latest ethnic punchline or newspaper tidbit. Interregnum alongside of the Trotsky man and Sure anti-perspirant. Political mania, but, without a true feeling for people, cannot sustain the peace or protection.

It was always a lie to preach it's a dog eat dog world. The beast survived to evolve into the man through social cooperation. Competition cannot strengthen what could have only become dead meat had men not worked together.

Women have always known this better. I think. Death and deprivation fall upon the flesh they are sucking. They have learned the differences and imperativeness of all ages through their children. They learned differences between their children. They have fine-tuned a science and art of interacting.

Wall keeps memories of buddies alive

As I entered the room, a deep feeling of reverence came upon me. The first view of the wall looked peaceful with the reflections of the trees grazing the room. Upon closer view the names of the forgotten dead came into focus.

I tried to read them, but could not see for the tears welling in my eyes.

From the deep recesses of my mind a feeling of loss, comradeship, and a sense of belonging swept over me releasing a flood down my chin.

Then the names appeared making images of the faces, with the terrible backdrop of war, showing where they had fallen to rise no more.

How could I have forgotten? Why was this pain buried so deep?

The effect of this experience was a catharsis with the effect of "Mother putting on the band-aid, and kissing it to make it better.”

God bless all of the individuals who made this possible. Thank you for letting me have this life experience, that my buddies are not forgotten.

Tutoring got aid, now giving thanks

On behalf of the students who use the ASI Tutoring service at the Learning Resource Center, I want to thank the members of ASUI and particularly Senator David Dose, for their continued support of the tutoring service, and for their most recent additional funding for this program.

I would like to correct a misattribution in the Oct. 11 issue of the paper; I did not say to the ASUI Senate that "our students are not happy with the math lab.” I said that students who come to us for math tutoring are looking for a different kind of help than that offered by the math labs; they need more.

Indeed, the math lab and the tutoring service are not doing the same thing at all; the lab offers drop-in help with homework assignments and we offer tutoring for long-term study skills for math. Our program is supplemental to the lab, and we did not begin to offer math tutoring at the LRC until we had asked for and received the permission of the Math Department to do so.

The Learning Resource Center supports each academic department by offering the kinds of programs that that department asks for; the Math Department believes that math tutoring is the service we should offer to math students. They have assisted us in the selection and training of our math tutors, and we support all of their programs, including math lab.

ISEP program offers chance to study abroad

By Richard Burke
Of the Argonaut

"Everyone should participate in the ISEP program. It's a great opportunity," said Catherine Bignotti, a student at the University of Idaho on exchange from France.

What is the ISEP program? For Bignotti, it is an opportunity to study in the United States that she wouldn't have otherwise had.

ISEP stands for the Interna- tional Student Exchange Pro- gram. This program is widely recognized as one of the most popular ways for students of all countries to have the chance to study abroad at a country of their choice. Each year, thousands of students par- ticipate in the program which includes numerous foreign countries as potential destinations.

The program allows for students to pay what it would normally cost to study in their nation, room and board for a year at their home school in exchange for the same at a foreign campus.

"It's very cheap to study here. For an affordable program," said Bignotti. "Some students say that they would like to go to Europe 'some day', and really don't think that they can," she added. According to Bignotti, ISEP is a great tool.

Bignotti is from Antibes, a ci- ty in the south of France. The ci- ty is a bit larger than Moscow, and is 20 kilometers from Nice. The climate there is warmer than Moscow's, ranging from minus 60's to 90's in the summer to the 40-50 degree range in the winter.

Bignotti studies at the Uni- versity of Letters and Science at Nice. It is a public university and, as is the case in many European countries, it is inex- pensive to attend. The cost is about $800 per year. "Yes, it is inexpensive," said Bignotti, "but the facilities (in Nice) aren't as nice as they are here."

The big cost," she said, "is the cost of living.

The campus life is very dif- ferent than here because the university is split up into dif- ferent campuses around the ci- ty, she said.

"You don't have the advan- tages of living and working together," said Bignotti. She also added that she finds campu- sus life here very fun. "It's great that you can get together and do things like going on trips or hav- ing parties, as well as study with one another."

A Nice, Bignotti was studying English and French as her ma- jor disciplines. The curriculum, however, is very different than that found at most American universities in that it is much more narrow.

"After you choose your major, you don't really get to choose any of your classes. They are all chosen for you," she said. "I like the fact that here in America you can choose your own courses. It allows the student to exercise more responsibility."

Although she likes the responsi- bility of choosing one's own classes, she feels that there is a contradiction in that attendance is monitored so closely here. "In France, you can get away with being late to classes if you need to because of another major requirement, but here you don't have that," she said. "It seems there is also very different in France. The French have a stricter attitude about the material whether you come to class or not," she said.

When asked what she found most striking about America, she mentioned "the three car trips, in order she said, "I don't have a idea that peo- ple are all so friendly here. It's definitely the best part about be- ing in the United States."

While staying in Nice, Bignotti said that she would like to travel and see the country itself. "I really like to see New York and California. I would also like to visit Canada if I get the chance," she said.

After her year in America, Bignotti will return to France to finish her studies. "I would like to go to Paris to study advertis- ing and hopefully do some traveling," she said.

Any students interested in studying abroad should contact Caroline Carter at 885-6285 or stop in at the Women's Center.

Peace Corps wants you

By Laurel Darrow
Of the Argonaut

Peace Corps recruiters will be at the UI next week to sign up graduating seniors for Peace Corps assignments in 60 countries.

Recruiters will be at an inform- ation booth in front of the library Oct. 18-19 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Former volunteers will have a film screen for Peace Corps in the SUN Recreation Room Oct. 15 from 7-9 p.m.

For interviews, students must sign up at the placement center. Interviewers will be on campus Oct. 21 and 22, and students must bring a completed application to the interview.

Applications can be obtained from the recruiters or from Patrick Evans, campus Peace Corps Liaison. His office is in Student Advisory Services, and his office hours are 1-4 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

The hiring process involves a long application, references and the interview, said Peter Sawchyn, recruiting representative from Seattle. Last year nearly 15,000 applications were received and only 3,350 volunteers were sent overseas. Anyone thinking of joining the Peace Corps should be patient, persistent, adventurous and willing to work hard, Sawchyn said.

Volunteers are given a month- ly living allowance, medical and insurance coverage, cultural and language training, compensation for the trip to their country of assignment and a $4,200 cash reassignment allowance at the end of two years service.

The all-volunteer Peace Corps is celebrating its 20th anniversary. It was established by Presi- dent John F. Kennedy. More than 100,000 Americans, in- cluding 44 Idahoans, have served as Peace Corps volunteers.
Vandals claw Wildcads, 31-28

By Greg Klimer
Of the Argonaut

With one more major obstacle out his squad’s drive to the Big Sky championship, UI head coach Dennis Erickson isn’t ready to etch his Vandals’ name on the trophy.

“It’s too early, we’ve got four league games left,” Erickson said after his team’s 31-28 win over Weber State.

“But I like it better than where we were last year at 0-3.”

With their 3-0 mark in the 1-AA conference, the Vandals find themselves at the top of the Big Sky heap.

“The was a big one for us, though,” Erickson said.

“Anytime you win one on the road in this league, it’s a real feather in your cap.

Along with being Idaho’s first win in Ogden in over 20 years, it was also the first time Erickson has flown from the Utah school a winner.

It didn’t look anything was going to be any different this year as the Vandals, play-lig before a Homecoming crowd of 12,804, roared off two quick scores to take an early 10-0 lead.

But the Vandals answered right back before the initial stan-ns could end with a 80 yard drive capped off by a Todd Fitness 11 yard TD sprint to get the Vandals within three.

“Got our momentum going,” Erickson said of the Idaho drive. “It was a very balanced drive by our offense.”

Vandals defensive end John Andrews sets his sights after shaking a legal Weber block. Photo Bureau/Rob Betts

The second period was one highlighted by the two school kickers, as Idaho’s Brian Decito nailed three of four three-pointers from 34, 34 and 46 yards, while Weber’s Craig Winberg nailed one from 89 to leave the Vandals with a 16-13 bulge at the intermission.

With the perfect 4 for 4 of the game, Decito has hit 11 of 11 for the year, two shy of a Big Sky record.

“Brum did a great job for us,” said Erickson. “He gave us a big boost.”

The third quarter was all

Idaho. Along with Decito’s final field goal, which hit the cross-bar and crept over, the Vandals scored twice to take a 31-13 lead.

The first score came on a 90 yard drive, with Greg Dild taking a Linehan handoff for the last yard.

The second six-pointer was a court passing play, as the Vandal Bengen took a Weber punt on his own 34 and scrambled 66 yards for a score.

Along with the punt return, Bengen ran for 23 yards in all-purpose running.

“Brum played well all game,”

Erickson said. “That third quarter might have been our best played of the year — defense, offense and the kicking game.”

While the third quarter was a good one, the Vandals took a break in the last.

“I got conservative,” Erickson confessed. “I shouldn’t have gotten away from the game plan. We were just trying to run out the clock.”

While the Idaho offense was doing, Weber’s defense, No. 1 in the nation, was rolling.

Weber quarterback Dave Sherman led the Vandals on two long drives, 77 and 60 yards, to pull Weber to within the final margin.

UI wide receiver Brant

Bengen has been named National Car Rental/Big Sky Conference offensive “Player of the Week.”

In a 5-foo-8, 172-pound junior, ranked up

228 yards in all-purpose running in Idaho’s 31-28 road victory over Weber State Saturday.

Bengen had five pass receptions for 97 yards, two punt returns for 70 yards and 55 yards rushing for a touchdown.

The Vandals are unbeaten in Big Sky play and in sole possession of first place with a 5-0 slate.

Ruggers drop grudge match

By Tom Liberman
Of the Argonaut

If a sport had the speed of hockey, the violence of football, the intricacies of baseball and the continuity of basketball it might be the greatest spectator sport in the world.

And if any sport has all of these characteristics it is rugby.

So why is it a relatively unknown activity of the UI campus?

Rugby has continuous action with 40 minute halves and only two substitutions per game.

While the first time you watch the sport it may not look very complicated, the more one understands the game the more intricate it becomes.

There is more than enough violence to suit any football fan.

Injuries are common, although we usually survive, and playing with pain is the rule not the exception.

The Idaho rugby team is not sponsored by the university so it is not a varsity sport and thus uniforms and away trips must be paid for by the players.

The essence of rugby is to take to ball, a sort of foot football with no seams, past the opponent’s touch (goal) line and touch it to the ground.

A rugby field is longer and wider than a football field to accommodate the 15 players on each team. There is only one referee.

This would seem to be con-nutive to certain branches of the rules on many occasions but on the whole the players are law abiding.

Intimidation does pay a major role in the sport, generally in an unspoken glare.

Deliver entries to Tri-State, located on the Pullman Highway in Moscow. Box will be located on Sporting Good Area's counter.

1. Contest is open to all University of Idaho students, faculty and staff. Argonaut mail subscribers are also eligible.
2. Contestants may submit only one forecast from each week.
3. Forms must be filled out completely and correctly.
4. The entry deadline is noon on Friday before the games. The Argonaut is not responsible for entries lost in the mail or destroyed.
5. Tie games cancel out.

Bret Drayer, Room 114, McConnell Hall, is this week's top forecaster in the Tri-State Contest. "Pick the Winner." Drayer was the only forecaster to correctly pick Idaho's win over Texas Christian. Drayer also picked both tie-breakers correctly, picking Idaho by 14 and Washington State by 10. The Vandals won by three while WSU blew Oregon State out by 34. Argonaut editor Greg Kilmer suffered through a 13 out of 20 week.

"Montana and NAU surprised me, I really thought Eastern would pull a little magic," Kilmer said. "I up my hat to the winner, there were a lot of surprises this week.

With the correct 13, Kilmer stands at 74 of 110 for the year.

This week's games were selected by Kilmer and Arg sport's writer Tom Liberman.

"Iowa and Michigan will be a dandy and the Reno and Weber could be a surprise," Kilmer said. "Texas and Arkansas is another one that could go any way."

This week's entries can be turned in at the Tri-State Sporting Good's counter before noon Friday.

For the Argonaut

Dripping with perspiration, the team takes the field for another practice game. Flinging off against a team of friends from their hall, they prepare for another long, hard workout. As they attempt to stand on fatigued legs at the end of practice, listening to their team captain's pep talk, they wonder why they have braved the cold walk to the Ribbie Dome and put off homework to whip themselves into shape.

"It's the pride and reputation of being a winner that gets them out here," says team captain Greg Bauer. "It's also a lot of fun." Whittman Hall has been the UI Intramural Ultimate Frisbee champions since the game started as an intramural sport three years ago. With four of seven starters and the rest of the team returning from last year, Bauer says they have a good chance of repeating again.

"But it should be tougher than last year because each year more teams are getting involved in the sport," he said. "Teams are gunning for us now that we've been the champs. We're the team to beat."

Bauer, one of three returning from the first championship team, along with Mark Niederauer and Steve Krakenberg, gives many reasons for the team's success. "We are more organized than any other team. We've got a lot of dedication, a lot of heart and we give it 100 percent," he said. "We have a good reputation and we go out to practice early to try to keep that."

Ultimate frisbee started at the UI as a special event of the Intramural Department in 1982. No intramural points were given for the sport that year. Due to popular demand, ultimate frisbee became an official sport in 1983.

The game was developed in the late 1960s by Columbia High School students in Maplewood, New Jersey. The game is now played as a varsity sport on some college campuses. It has also become a popular sport on the corporate level, with competitions held across the country.

Using a 165 gram flying disc, popularly known as a frisbee, seven players on each team line up at the 10 yard lines of a football field. Play begins with a throwoff, which corresponds to a football kickoff. The receiving team passes the frisbee from one teammate to another, trying to score a point by catching the frisbee in the other team's end zone.

Meanwhile, defensive players try to prevent the offense from completing passes by guarding the thrower and covering potential receivers. Turnovers occur when a pass is incomplete or out of bounds. They also occur if the receiver fails to throw the disc before a defensive guard counts to 15 seconds. Body contact is forbidden. If such a foul occurs, the play is repeated.

Music fills the week

Two chamber music concerts are scheduled this week along with an appearance by the UI Orchestra and Wind Ensemble.

Tonight is the first concert of the Recital Hall Idaho series at the UI, the Orchestra and Ensemble will perform on Thursday at the Moscow High School Auditorium as well as WSU's Kimbrough Hall.

The Recital Hall Idaho concert begins at 8 p.m. in the Music Building Recital Hall. Several soloists will be featured: Charles Walton, tenor; Robert Dickow, horn; playing Britten's "Canticle IV." Rhonda Larsen, a senior who recently won the National Flute Association's Young Artist's Competition, will also be featured in several flute solos.

The cello choir under the direction of William Wharton will play the Pachabel "Canon." In addition, several students and faculty members will play in a modern piece, Stravinsky's "Soldier's Tale."

The Recital Hall Idaho series is dedicated to raising funds for music scholarships, so a donation will be requested at the door.

Then on Thursday the Orchestra will appear at the Moscow High School Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The WSU concert is also on Thursday at 8 p.m. in Kimbrough Hall. A chamber music quartet will perform.

New Gallery has class

By Sarah Kerseul
Of the Argonaut

The formal opening of the new Prichard Gallery revealed a metropolitan reception. The list of those who attended reads like a who's who of Moscow.

Anne Gardiner's glass and ceramic sculptures were an interesting choice for the inaugural exhibit since modern art is often misinterpreted and criticized. One observer was highly disinclined, but admitted later that the sculptures aroused his curiosity.

Gardiner's work is intriguing. The sculptures are both threatening and comical. The "Good Spirit Poles," which stand over ten feet high, and the "Bandit" and "Yellow One/ Yellow Two," which stand at slightly over human scale almost assume personalities as they tower over the observers. The artist says her work reflects many influences, both good and bad. The sculptures are primitive and modern. Gardiner says she is continuing the tradition of creating sculptures which protect against malevolent spirits.

The mask series is not as striking as the poles but equally engaging on inspection. I particularly liked the four clowns whose expressions reflected the bounty, or lack of it, in their hats.

UI Professor Emeritus Malcolm Renfrew's watercolors are in great contrast to Gardiner's work. His simple paintings of America and Canada are charming. So the Gardiner/Renfrew exhibition has something to interest everybody.

The new gallery appropriately smelled of new paint. The first floor contains 3,200 feet of exhibit space and a mezzanine and bar on the second floor. 1,300 feet, in a mezzanine that affords an interesting perspective on the Gardiner sculptures.
Mimes, blues groups together

The Seattle Mime Theater, a four-artists combining mime with modern theater and dance, will perform at WSU's Beasley Coliseum. They will also play along with the Main Attraction, a rhythm and blues band, this Wednesday at 8 p.m. If tickets are sold at $8 for general admission and $4 for students and senior citizens at the coliseum box office. This is the second in the series of Palouse Performances, which is sponsored by the college and the UI.

Seattle's mime company, since 1977, the quartet has toured extensively through the Northwest and Alaska, and abroad, including Edinburgh, Scotland and London. The group utilizes music, dance and improvisation to produce a new form of physical theatre. They add props and voices when necessary with the goal of capturing the texture and resonance of the modern world in full scope—from the beauty and wonder of nature to the energy and glamour of high-tech culture.

Joining the mimes, the Main Attraction is a group that draws from the traditions of the 50s and 60s, trying to recapture the fun and energy of that period with an updated style of its own. They will include in their performance arrangements of hits made popular by the Temptations and the Four Seasons, contemporary classics like "Elvira" and original compositions.

Coming Palouse Performances include "Ain't Misbehavin'" on Nov. 10, the Ramsey Lewis Trio on Nov. 14, The Peking Acrobats on Feb. 4, The Brass Band on March 20, and the Philadelphia String Quartet on March 27 and more.

Pajama Game delightful

By Douglas Jones

Oil City, Pa.

Delightful! It's not everyday that I allowed myself to use an exclamation point, but the Moscow Community Theater's production of the Pajama Game deserves the exclamation.

If for unfortunate reason you were not able to see this tasty theatrical comedy, take heed and don't let the next MCT production pass you by.

REVIEW

I didn't even let the Vandals game stop me from going (but during intermission) to see a handsome gentleman just down the aisle who had a radio Walkman kept us up on the score.

The musical is based on the novel Seven and a Half Centes by Richard Bissell, who worked with playwright George Abbott, composer and lyricist Richard Adler and Jerry Ross to create the script The Pajama Game.

Director Edmund M. Chavez, who is the UI's Ribble Dome manager and a professor of theater arts, did an outstanding job of taking this 50-year-old script and setting it in the 1960s.

An excellent example of this is a humorous scene where Sid Schmidt (played by Robert Newman) sings "Hey There," a love song which is repeated several times throughout the musical. In this scene Sid's dictaphone, which had been accidentally left on, replays his singing—somewhat to his embarrassment.

Agnes thought-provoking

By Nelia Letizia

Oil City, Pa.

How are a nun and a murdered baby tied together? That is the subject of "Agnes of God," a movie currently playing at the University 4 Theater by the Palouse Empire Mall.

REVIEW

The movie features Meg Tilly as Agnes, a disturbed young nun living in a convent in Carmel, a time Bancroft as her mother superior, and Jane Fonda as Dr. Martha Livingston, a court-appointed psychiatrist sent to determine if Tilly is really guilty of murdering her own child.

Tilly is believable as the chain-smoking psychiatrist because the part seems to fit her own personality very well. Dr. Livingston is hard-nosed, unfeigned, and sometimes brutally blunt when it comes to her intentions for the investigation of Tilly. She will ask any question, and seek any source to find the information she is looking for. Fonda seems to have the same qualities as the psychiatrist. But Fonda as Livingston has compassion for Tilly. She tries to help Tilly unlock the truth about the baby's murder and to free her from an ugly past, but not with the drastic treatment of a doctor towards a client.

Tilly, as Agnes, does a wonderful job of portraying a mentally disturbed nun who has no recognition of the murder. She is vague and frightened, but manages to...
Androcles and the Lion is a success

By Kunra Metzler
Of the Argusman

The performance of Androcles and the Lion was full of surprises.

The characters were brought to life by actors who not only took their craft seriously but had fun doing it.

Steven Taylor played Androcles with exhilaration. He seemed to enjoy every minute of what he was doing.

Hal Nelson, as Pantalone, was excellent. His funny portrayal was one of the many bright spots of the play.

Isabella, Kerry Kel Beeson, and Neil McDermott, were like their fellow actors—extraordinary.

The "boldest captain in all of Italy" was played by Herb Alden. The captain was hilarious thanks to Alden's work. His booming voice and large stature were perfect for the part and Alden played his part to the hilt.

Paul Gan played the lion. A little boy in front giggled with fear when Gan roared. Gan also did an excellent job as the narrator and in the speechless part of the flower in the woods.

The flower which bowed and nodded answers to the characters questions, was just one of the funny surprises included in the play. Suzie Nelson as director brought out the many humorous aspects of children's theater in the play which made the play even more enjoyable.

There is very little negative to say about the performance. At times I wished the lion was bigger and had a stronger voice—but that's just what I see a lion as—Gan didn't do anything wrong.

The timing was off a little, however, these actors and actress should be applauded for being able to get up on stage and doing a superb job of bringing a story to life, rather than boxed for being a little off. Not very many people can do what they do—that takes a lot out of you.

College handbook helpful

By Erta Fonsleay
Of the Argusman

Arriving on campus for the first time as a freshman or leaving your alma mater after years of school can be intimidating experiences. Scott Edelstein tackles these problems and more in his new book, College: A User's Manual.

Edelstein approaches problems that students at all levels of college face every day, with a witty and interesting style. He reassures students that they are not the only ones who have come across serious dilemmas while in college.

REVIEW

Through Edelstein's 11 years as a student and teacher he has accumulated hundreds of tips that can help any student become successful after college.

A User's Manual begins with advice on how to choose the right college for you. Edelstein even mentions that college is not for everyone. He advises not to think that our parents neglected to tell us.

He sees things as they are and states them in his manual.

He details methods on how to choose the right major and how to get the most out of classes. Edelstein reassures students with less "practical" majors that there is a place for them on the job market.

The helpful tips in A User's Manual range from the correct way to write papers and take exams to methods of dealing with stress and anxiety.

According to Edelstein, "Almost nothing that happens in college is a genuine disaster or a permanent disability, no matter how bad it might seem at the time."

He lists steps to avoid college burnout and how not to have a nervous breakdown before the end of fall.

But if college burnout does occur there are ways to gracefully exit academic life. Transferring is an option as well as simply taking some time off. Edelstein advises students as to which situation should be taken and why.

If nothing seems to be working for you, then dropping out may be the answer. "A user's guide to dropping out is no disaster. It does not necessarily mean you are stupid or a failure," Edelstein says.

But Edelstein warns that dropping out of school should be used only as a last resort.

The everyday and often mundane events of college life are also covered in A User's Manual. Everything from college clubs, problems with roommates, finding off-campus housing, all is explored.

Answers to important issues such as who pays on a date and why a bad idea is provided by Edelstein.

A User's Manual ends with an important chapter on life beyond college, on how students should look to Edelstein. "The current job situation outside of college is a lot rosier than many people think."

But lists ways to adjust to the outside world and how to find a career you can be happy doing.

"Perseverance and patience are essential and often crucial in the world outside college," is Edelstein's ending advice.

SEATTLE MIME THEATRE

The MAIN ATTRACTION

Enjoy the combination of comedy, dance and theatre that Seattle Mime has dug together in a rare, working order of bizarre, quirkily contorted characters and the crudest pass decent, yet will please any standard mime lover and those who consider the performance of the theatre something to occur in an Odeum or a seance.

The Main Attraction is presented with comedic touches, making their show one of the funniest and liveliest of its kind. The main attraction will impress you with their wit, charm and entertainment. Come and enjoy the contemporary with something old-fashioned. The show is performed by the Seattle Mime at the Seattle MIME Theatre on Wednesday, October 16, 1985 8:00 PM. WSI Coliseum Theatre

Tickets Available at Coliseum Box Office, Bonaventure Inc. (206) 623-2100 or Ticket Master.
Agnes, from page 12 reveal an unconscious something terrible by being unused around Fonda. Tilly does not effectively portray Agnes as a completely developed character. At times Tilly exaggerates facial expressions, and she cannot seem to capture Agnes' overwhelming love of God. Bancroft's performance as the mother superior is done well, especially since she plays almost two roles. Bancroft portrays a nun belligerent to earth, who is suspicious of Fonda and fears the doctor will lead Agnes away from her spirituality.

At the same time, Bancroft plays a woman who also recognizes that Agnes is not a saint, but a fragile young woman who is in danger of going to prison. Bancroft is realistic, mois-turized, and at the same time, even friendly to Fonda, who is very much like her because she is a forceful woman.

Details of the murder and the circumstances before it are unravelled slowly by Fonda, which helps keep the interest in the plot high. But the conclusion of the movie is somewhat firmly established before it is never so firmly established who the baby's father was.

Either Agnes is so disturbed that she can no longer tell Fonda the actual details of the baby's conception or the conclusion is purposely made to leave a question and make the viewer think about what really happened.

Overall, the movie is good, but beware of the ending.

the budget each spring for the upcoming fiscal year, it receives official enrollment projections from the UI Budget Office. These figures are assumed to be conservative, as a hedge against overspending and revolts.

Based on the amount of the cutback recommended to Freund by the Budget Office, enrollment will be down by more than 700 full-time students this year (400 this fall and 300 next spring).

The Finance Committee representatives and Freund agreed it would probably be safer to predict a drop of 400 each semester.

The Budget Office predicted a fall-and-spring total of about 13,400 full-time students.
