Test anxiety? It might be too easy for someone else to take it for you

By Laurel Darrow
Of the Argonaut
It's midnight, and Joan Student is studying for her geology test. Her roommate, Betty the Brain, is trying to help her cram facts into her head. But Joan's mind is boggled. As Mary discussed metamorphic rocks for the third time, Joan gets an idea: "Will you take the test for me? Mary? I'll buy you a six pack.

If Mary agrees to be a ringer for Joan, she can probably pull it off in many classes on campus. I recently took four midterms in classes I am not registered for to see what security measures are in place to stop ringers. I found out that anyone can take a test in PHY 211; Classical Mythology, Geol 100; Man's Physical Environment, Geol 100; Physical Geology, and Aplct 251: Principles of Statistics. Although the professors and their assistants were on the lookout for crib sheets and moving eyes, no one ever raised an eyebrow when I—an unfamiliar face in the crowd—banded in tests. Those tests could have had your name on them and no one would have found out about our arrangement. Likewise, your roommate or a professional test taker could have made the grade for you.

Argonaut analysis

Professors said they are aware that this can happen. John Bush, who teaches a Geol. 100 class, said the classes are large and the teachers do not recognize all the students, especially since 20 percent of them do not come to lectures. Bush said he has no security measures to stop ringers because he has never been able to think of an easy method. He said he could have a seating chart with students' pictures on it and use that to make sure Peter is not taking Paul's test. But that would be difficult. He said he could also ask students' I.D. cards as they turn in their tests, but the class is large and it would be time-consuming to check each student's card. It might take so much time that some students would be late for their next class, he added.

Scott Morris, assistant professor of geography, said another problem with the I.D. checks is that 5-10 percent of the students probably would not have their cards. "What do you mean by that case?" he asked.

He added that he is not convinced any security method could catch all the cheaters. "It's difficult for us as teachers to be as committed to stopping all possible forms of cheating as some people are to doing it."

He said he tries to instill in students the idea that life is a "do-it-yourself" job. "While it might be possible to cheat your way through this course, there is no way you can cheat your way through life." Eventually cheaters have to face the music, he said. They may make it through freshman courses by cheating, but they will not be able to do the same in upper-division classes. They will not be able to get ringers for standardized tests for graduate school, law school or medical school, he said. "They would pay at that point."

But Morris said professors are always faced with the decision whether to institute security measures. "As his classes grow in size, he is thinking about security measures, but he said he is concerned that some would be insulting to the student. "It's a very hard thing to deal with," he said.

"Although the professors and their assistants were on the look-out for crib sheets and moving eyes, no one raised an eyebrow when I—a unfamiliar face in the crowd—banded in tests."

Mark Covey, assistant professor of psychology, agrees. "Getting carded to take an exam aids insulate to injury," he said. I.D. cards are checked in Psych. 100 classes, but the check is made only to see that the students have copied their numbers correctly on to the test form. Covey said. He added that it takes only a few seconds to make that check. He said his view of cheating is basically that the cheater hurts himself. "I'm from the school that says you get as much out of educations as you put into it. Someone who takes steps to circumvent learning isn't going to get much out of the whole experience," Covey said. "They're not going to profit by cheating." Louis Perraud, assistant professor of classics, said cheating has concerned him for a long time. That is why he bought a personal computer and keeps a computer file of 3,000 test questions. The questions are different every semester. "The only way a person could score decently is if they're in the class," Perraud said.

The Student Code of Conduct states that academic honesty is of utmost importance. "Cheating on classwork or outside assignments, examinations or tests is in violation of this code," the code also says that maintaining academic standards and integrity is the responsibility of students and instructors.

Have you ever taken a test and noticed people whom you have never seen in class before, also taking the test? The Idaho Argonaut found that it might be easier than it should be for a "ringer" to take the test for you.

White and Dose announce candidacy for ASUI heads

By Megan Goldo
Of the Argonaut
Sens. Gino White and David Dose added their names to the list of candidates running for ASUI president and vice president respectively.

The two will run together on a ticket. The motto of their campaign is "There is a way."

"There is a way to get more service for the student fees," Dose said.

"There is a way we can get more active involvement in the ASUI," White said.

"There is a way to prevent further student fee increases," Dose said.

Both think services were not expanded by the 40 percent increase in student fees implemented last year.

Dose said the government needs to be streamlined. Pay scales and job descriptions of ASUI positions need to be made, and more should be allotted depending on what programs the students want.

"It's not so much we shouldn't spend the money; we should prioritize," White said.

"They say a stronger separation between the executive branch and the Senate is needed in order to get different objective views on bills," White said he would not attend many Senate meetings if elected. "I don't want to propagate my views there."

"Presently the president debates just as much as the senators do," Dose said.

"Now you have a president lobbying and debating and some senators may be swayed because she has special power," White said.

White, a senior in political science from Gault Hall, was elected senator last April. He served as FCC (Political Concerns Committee) Chairman last year and is a delegate of ASUI (Associated Students of Idaho).

"I have a lot of experience on a statewide level," said White, who has served as an intern for the governor's final management office in Boise. "I don't think I'm suited for the Senate."

Higher drinking age likely

By Kenny McCoilis
Of the Argonaut

If the Idaho drinking age is not raised to 21 by Oct. 1, 1986, the Department of Transportation will lose five percent of its federal highway funding, or $4.4 million, and 10 percent in 1987 or $8.8 million. At the same time, the rise in the drinking age may greatly affect area businesses that deal in alcoholic beverages.

According to Hugh Lydon, chief of management and planning for the Department of Transportation/Division of Highways, the federal government provides 90 percent of Idaho's highway funds, or approximately $80 million.

The state of Idaho provides the remaining 10 percent by means of a gasoline tax (14 cents per gallon), a highway user tax which affects all vehicles using Idaho highways, and a ton-mileage tax, which is imposed on truckers.

If the Idaho Legislature does not pass the new drinking age law, the highways will lose the federal funds and highway construction and maintenance will suffer, said Lydon. It is not clear if all projects will be affected, or those with lesser importance, but the loss of funds will definitely delay many construction and maintenance jobs that are greatly needed.

Lucas said that the state will do nothing to compensate for the loss of funds.

The state of Idaho has three years to raise the drinking age. If the state does pass the drinking age within three years, but after Oct. 1, 1986, the federal government will refund the money lost. After the three years, however, the federal money will not be available for retraction, Wybert said.

Rep. James "Doc" Lucas (R-Moscow) does not support the raise in the drinking age, saying that "It'll only change the place they'll (those under 21) drink, as in cars, back alleys and in the woods."

Lydon likened the federally forced change of the drinking age to blackmail, and mentioned that it is likely that the 21-year drinking age will take affect by July 1, 1986 unless an emergency clause is passed, which would make the new drinking age effective immediately after the law is passed.

Lucas said that some states are suing the federal government, because they feel that counties within the state should have the option to decide who should be able to drink. Lucas noted that some counties within some states are dry as opposed to wet (alcoholic beverages sold), and he believed that the federal government is assuming the responsibility of an imprisonment that belongs to the state governments.

"It'll only change the place they'll (those under 21) drink, as in cars, back alleys and in the woods."

Representative James "Doc" Lucas (R-Moscow) on the raising of the drinking age to 21 states should also have that option as to what the drinking age should be.

Pat Reno, Department of Transportation/Highway Safety staff person, said the raise in the drinking age may lead to a 10-25 percent reduction in alcohol-related accidents. Seventeen to 22-year-olds, who represent 13.4 percent of the See Drinking, page 16

Pierce to seek ASUI VP post

By Megan Guido
Of the Argonaut

Jim Pierce is a man of specifics. Pierce, who is running for ASUI Vice President, says he is doing so because the Senate needs to set specific goals and time limits in which the goals must be met.

The junior, a finance major and member of Delta Tau Delta, served as a senator for two terms a year ago. He decided to run the beginning of this school year.

"None of the people running (for vice president) has anymore experience than another," he said. "I've dealt more with the state legislature and the administration more than the other two have, though."

Pierce says he has plans to solve current ASUI problems, but does not want to reveal them during the campaign.

"For example, I'd like to see some different things done for off-campus representation. I have a specific plan," he said.

Pierce said his biggest concern is the ASUI finances.

"I don't like $60,000 deficits. I have a problem with the fact they are giving out as much money as they are giving in. In light of the fact they are running in the red, I would use federal funds to help me. I'd feel that the administration was supposed to watch over the budgets. They let that golf course go thousand of dollars over budget."

As vice president, Pierce said he would run the Senate more efficiently. "We shouldn't have two different bills coming out with the same intent. That should be alleviated," he said. "It would save a lot of time."

He added pre-session should be run more effectively.

"When an issue comes up, we'll sit and talk about it and put together a viable bill and put it together right the first time. It takes too long to get a bill through the dang thing sometimes."

A vice president has to be firm, Pierce said.

"You can't let things get out of hand. I've been to some Senate meetings and things did see Pierce, page 16

Vandal Gold wine to be discontinued

Ul officials say school's logo was used without necessary permission

By Bryan Clark
Of the Argonaut

If the last time you went shopping, you noticed a new wine on the local market called "Vandal Gold," what you saw was what is soon to be a collectors' item, according to Leo Ames, the supervisor of publicity design for the UI.

"Apparently, Weston Wineries, the distributor of the product, has been using the Vandal logo on the "Vandal Gold" wine bottle without the proper consent of the university," said Ames, who administers the use and selection of the UI's corporate symbols.

The university's symbols consist of the Vandal logo, the star-shaped UI logo, the new centennial design and many other less frequently used identifying marks.

Ames described how he found out about the use of the logo on the wine bottles.

"It didn't come to my attention until after several deans and other higher level university administrators asked me about it. They weren't making accusations, they were simply curious. I then went to Rosaners to find out for myself what kind of use our logo was being put to."

Discovering that Weston Wineries had obtained and used the emblem without consulting him first, which is the standard procedure, Ames contacted International Collegiate Enterprises, ICE, which is the company that handles the business end of the logo's administration.

For the last two years, ICE has been the chief administrator of the university's corporate identity.

"All commercial ventures involving the UI emblems go through ICE, but they are to be also approved by myself prior to their use," Ames said.

Ames went on to say, "ICE knew nothing about the situation but contacted Weston for me and was informed that the winery, through Sheyne Weston, had made a deal with the UI athletic department for the production of the wine and its subsequent sale in the Moscow area. Apparently, the UI portion of the profits were to go to the athletic department. Weston informed ICE that he had dealt with Bill Belknap.

Vandals, however, have been dealt with a renewal of the lawsuit, presumably by Belknap's suppliers. And the lawsuit will probably continue on its way, for Belknap is the corporate agent of the winery."

"I never really talked to Sheyne Weston regarding this at all. The athletic department, from my understanding, was to receive the money."

Yet Ames also commented, "I believe that Weston was dealing without necessary permission."

Candidates’s words will be their own

The ASU political season officially opened last week, with the availability of petitions and declaration for candidacy by Idaho freshmen. This happened a month before the November 20 election date, the earliest start in years.

The Idaho Argonaut is a firm believer in good student government and vigorous campaigning on the issues. The students who pay ASU fees must have an opportunity to read and hear each candidate’s position and who he or she is qualified to represent the students.

Unfortunately, the Argonaut has limited resources of space and reporters, and we will be unable to interview candidates as they stump around campus.

Instead, we will run a special section in the Friday, November 15, issue of the paper. This will include brief biographies, pictures and each person’s position on certain issues.

The words we publish will be those of the candidate, edited only for misspellings. Each response will be limited to 60 words, which represents just over two column inches. That’s not a whole lot of room, but it will be a test of clarity and conciseness. If the limit is exceeded, will cut off the responses in mid-sentence, if necessary.

(The paragraph above is 60 words.)

The questions which follow are the ones to which we will publish responses. Each candidate is responsible for both questions for all Candidates” and those for his or her respective office. Responses will be printed in the paper in the order received by the editor. The deadline is the 15th of November, the 1st of the month.

The ASU Photo Bureau, also located on the third floor of the SUB will have a sign-up sheet scheduling candidate portraits.

All candidates:

* “Please give a mini-biography. Tell the students about yourself.”
* “Why should you be elected to this position?”
* “How will you keep in touch with the concerns of the average student?”
* “What didn’t the Argonaut ask?”

Candidates for ASU President:

* “Why are you qualified to present the student’s needs and concerns to the UI administration, Board of Regents and the Alumni Association?”
* “Why are you qualified to be chief administrative officer of the ASU?”

Candidates for vice-president:

* “What should be the relationship between the president and the senator?”
* “What should be the relationship between the vice-president and the Senator?”

Candidates for the ASU Senate:

* “What is the role of a senator?”
* “What should be the relationship between the Senate and the ASU president?”

What should be the relationship between the Senate and the ASU vice-president?

Our space limitations will also affect our letters policy. Each letter must be typewritten, double-spaced, and not exceed 250 words. We will publish only two letters of support for each candidate. Letters which support more than one candidate will be apportioned accordingly. We will run no more than three signatures (or group indentifications) per letter. The last day of publication for letters which attack candidates will be Friday, November 15, in order to permit rebuttals.

Lions and tigers and bears, oh my!

Victoria Seever

What do you suppose it is about us that loves to be scared to death? After all, it is rather an odd notion for a national holiday. But America wouldn’t be one to miss out on the fun of “placating a ghoul week.” Diverting herself of candies, party costumes, horror shows and mad, mail screamers.

She seems a bit preoccupied with Sunday morning sales too, such as, “List the six scariest things that first come to mind.” A typical response might run something like: meeting the in-laws, turning forty, falling on your face on the dance floor, spiders, snakes and the film that is Chicago.

Well, I like spiders a lot, as long as I don’t have to teach them, so let me substitute “witch hunters.” Not witches, who other than having a mutual fondness for the color black, seem to occupy a niche to one side of the cauldron and cause me no grief. I mean, anyone who’d rather fly a broom than sweep can’t be all bad.

But something that really scares the paj-dies out of me are those people who wear hooded cloaks over their minds and love to play “It’s Inquisition time again.” You know the ones: those who carry prejudices or insecurity to disturbing lengths. Those whose de-humanize their targets and keep a murdering stake under your nose.

They pursue a lot of avenues, like sexual harassment and gender gaps. Or being some-one who is always better than you by tear-ing you down. Or pitying one man’s favorite god against yours, like some kind of cock fight. Or sometimes, a second-rate actor to lec-ture us on fictional tax reform, cartoonist Star Wars, and a “jerry-erred” morality.

The oldest trick in the book is to plant something on a scapegoat. We all started it with pointing a not-so-innocent finger at a younger brother or older sister, and the technique’s been firmly implanted ever since.

You can see the stars and stripes as the pure wings of an angel, and pin the forked tail of whichever foreign dragon this round, if you in-sist on it. It doesn’t mean you’re accurate. Or you can nit-pick each other’s faults from the cosnmatic tube to whose half-brain is better than whose. Or whether mousse and pearls really make for a better image than a molotov and safety pins.

Take Dorothy, for example, in her early punk socks and ruby slippers. Straight out of the backbone of America, who found terrific friends in the Land of Oz. She hold nothing against midgets, the lollipop guild, or men of tin and straw and monkey tails, singing “Over-the-roo-o-o.”

And all witches won’t evil and ugly. She even apologized for doing a couple of them in. It’s one thing to litter your shadow on a Halloween night and toss a suspiscious eye on a screwball-looking stranger. But it’s a pretty boring party where everyone wears a sheet and just say “boo.”

Maybe there’s a lesson in that bag of sweets we give and get. Ghouls are largely a fabrica-tion, and wickedness is more like a loveable E.T. So just have matches in the box, Duck sky-bornstorms if you don’t want straw in your hair. And have a better time in the world of outer limits instead of a nasty one in the too-narrow confines of a one-way viewpoint.

And most of all, have fun this Halloween. I’ll be knocking on your door as the horse of a different color, straight from the Emerald City, wearing all the hues of the rain bow, and a little of black too.

Letters Policy

The Idaho Argonaut will accept letters to the editor until noon on the day prior to publication. They should be limited to one page in length, typed, and double-spaced. For subjects requiring greater exposition, ar-magammings may be mad in the edition. Letters must be signed, and include the name, address, and phone number of the writer. Proof of identity will be needed at time of submission. Letters received by mail will not be run unless confirmation of authorship is mad. Names of writers will not be withheld. Letters may be edited for mechanical and spelling errors. The Idaho Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to publish any letter.
Receipt not good for admission

A question, not necessarily rhetorical, perhaps unanswerable, more likely unknown, but nevertheless admissible: Who's the best parking policy at this university?

This past Saturday (Oct. 19), I attended the home football game against Montana. I am a full-time student at this university, but I have been here for four years in fact. It was with shock and great displeasure to learn that I would have to pay to see the game. Aye, aye, well, this Friday night there was a yellow registration slip, the same yellow registration slip which I had used to get into each preceding game. When informed by the D-ringer my slip was no longer valid, I scoffed and told him my yellow slip, although somewhat wrinkled, was in fact valid and I was going to see the game and not on a paid-for ticket basis.

I had asked when this new policy had gone into effect, for I have used my yellow slip that wrinkled face at every occasion which requires proof of enrollment, and was told that nothing had appeared in Friday’s Argonaut. Well, certainly I felt foolish at this point. Knowing that every student in the Argonaut specifically the ever-present “Bullets” section in the lower right hand corner of page four, it soon became apparent that I was the only one who had failed to be made aware of the new policy change.

It is known that the yellow slip is a strong evidence a person is a student. However, I can understand the mechanism to let in anyone brandishing a yellow piece of paper, as friends and relatives are likely to use a student’s copy while the latter enters on his ID card.

This problem is easily corrected by requiring some sort of ID confirming that one is who he claims to be. I suppose, however, it is better to take advantage of a winning team and insure that there are no freeloaders. I also wonder if the relatively low turnout for Saturday’s game had something to do with the frustrations of other students with this behind-the-back policy change of the university.

Why haven’t I received an ID card?

Well, perhaps it is because I don’t take pictures well, and all the things in my wallet with my picture on them the less self-assured I feel. In reality, however, it is my pro-crassinating attitude and obviating incorrect belief my yellow slip would get me by. I must now go to the controller’s Office and play their game that I have no receive another slip which essentially confirms what the registration department would have to be a great coincidence if it were also yellow.

Finally, I am left to ponder as to my status within the university. I have no ID card, and my registration slip is invalid, it therefore seems that I am no longer a student, or student at all, for that matter. I think I’ll enjoy the freedom for a few days and go pop the Gold lot.

Party hearty on your own house

To the fraternity boys who urinated on my mailbox, I can only say I’m sorry you ran away from me, because I’m sure we haven’t found a cure for your bladder problems.

To other prospective public urinators-seeking-a-higher-education: I would like to remind you that due to the poor location of the American Legion Cabin on Howard Street in Moscow, loud rock-and-roll bands mixed with alcohol are excessively loud for the neighbors living near by.

Many groups have quieter meetings and parties with aplaylist. However, we neighbors reserve the right to nap a full-time student. I will personally close down, with the assistance of the Moscow police, every party held at the Cabin which is loud. Unfortunately, due to the above mentioned cause, every college-crowd par-ties more worryingly loud.

The idea is: hold your event at your own place and you can party, pulse and piss as you please.

UNICEF treats

The members of Kappa Kappa Gamma will be trick-or-treating for UNICEF — the United Nations Children’s Fund — on Oct. 31. The money we raise will go toward the health of children in Asia, Africa, and Latin America who desperately need help.

The diseases of poverty take the lives of 60,000 children every day. That is 15 million every year. The numbers may seem overwhelming, but UNICEF can prevent half of these children’s deaths.

On October 31, National UNICEF Day, please show your concern for the children of the world by supporting our UNICEF fund drive. The proceeds will make a world of difference in the lives of so many children.

A message from long-time friend

Thank you for the Argonaut, the best-run student paper in my memory.

It comes promptly something that has never before been heard. Itcut the vocabulary-starved sheet which insisted on the millions has good comment of timely nature, and is overall good journalism.

The Albionian carried a re-crest headline about the possible bandleader of eggkettars and the raising to age 21 for legitimate consumption.

This looked pretty shocking to you students who imbibe. You drink hard and play hard. It is your right. Or is it?

Or maybe...

Another editor of this paper went to become head of person-come homes and was coming home after a Labor Day weekend. A driving drunk crossed the median line and met him head-on with tremendous force. He died at the scene.

Do you read “Dear Abby”?

She carried an item from Twin Falls, Idaho, on driving drunk.

It was written by a man in jail.

“I am doing six months in here for DUI. I have seen people come in here because they’ve killed and injured people while driving drunk. It’s no joke. It is costly, I know.

“I can’t pay my bills while I’m here. I am losing my credit. I just got my insurance down to a low yearly rate, and now it is going right back up higher than ever. It’s hard to keep a job without a driver’s license.”

He continues. “Think about the family vacation, or a new TV, or maybe a VCR, or your dear one’s birthday present, because when you get done paying for your policy, that’s all you’ll be able to think about. So if you have a car instead of a bike, driving, stop now and get help.”

The price of responsible drinking is to be appraised.

Alcohol:
The most abused drug on campus

By Erin Fenning

The University of Idaho's policies against substance abuse are not strong enough, according to a drug and rehabilitation counselor for Human Services Inc., says, "There has not been a responsibility shown by the UI on substance abuse," Miller said. "There is no avenue for people who have problems to go to."

Miller said the university should establish new guidelines and suggest that living groups adopt similar policies. The UI's guidelines are, according to Article VIII of the Student Code of Conduct, to act in the role of counselor, disciplinary action is to be taken by the police. However, if academic operations are affected then the student in violation may be simply warned or expelled, depending on the seriousness of the violation. "We are not the police," said Jim Bauer, coordinator for residence hall programs. "What we see we report, we are in the role of counseling."

For the past four years the UI has been working with alcohol awareness, specifically through Alcohol Awareness Week, but they have not done anything specifically with other drug awareness, he said.

According to Detective Mike Hogan, the judicial system is at fault, "The college student is here for an education and the courts do not want to impair that education for any length of time," he said.

Most students arrested for dealing drugs are probably black, Miller believed. "It is a fine. He said. The fine is significant because most of the (student) drug dealers don't have that money in a short period of time."

"The courts need to tighten up and incarcerate some of these offenders," Miller said.

Most work done with drug abuse is done by Human Services Inc. The service has a contract with the state of Idaho to work with the Idaho County. "I am pretty much for counseling in Latah County," said Miller.

"Alcohol is the most widely abused substance on campus, but the rest are right there," Miller said.

Hogan also said that after alcohol, marijuana and cocaine were the most abused substances. "Seventy percent of our cases with college students involve alcohol," he said.

"I think most people do not perceive that they are having a drug problem," he said. "Where does abuse leave off and addiction start?"

We have arrested four students for dealing drugs and there are others that we know about but have not gotten around to yet," he said.

Another drug that has been gaining popularity is methamphetamine, according to Hogan, is methamphetamine (speed).

"Women abuse it more than men," he said. One of the side effects is weight loss but after withdrawal begins there is a dramatic weight gain if the abuser is lucky enough to quit, he said.

"I don't think drug abuse at the UI is more serious than at any other university," he added. A small sample of people at the UI seems to agree. (The names used are not their own.)

Michelle, a freshman, said "There is not really a problem because I think people are fairly intelligent with the use of drugs."

"There is more of a problem with alcohol abuse, maybe with other substances," she said.

She began drinking and experimenting with drugs in high school, "Peer pressure played a part but I began to be curious than anything else," she said.

Dave, a sophomore, also does not believe there is a problem with drug abuse at the UI. "I don't think it is a problem. Most of the use is recreational," he said.

"I began using drugs on a more regular basis last March," he said. "People knew about it and it seemed like a fad." "I recently decided to quit for a month because I think I have been doing too much of it," he said. "Sometimes I do drugs four to five times a week but I never to one two times."

"I have been relying on it too much because of some depression I have been feeling lately," he said.

"I want to get out of my system.

"I am a drug addict and I have friends. I have noticed a loss of motivation, skipping class a lot, and health problems," he said.

Jennifer, a sophomore, said, "There is a lot of drinking because of drugs here because there are not that many drugs." It is much worse on other campuses.

"This is more of a drinking school," she said. "Drugs are under the table.

I do drugs possibly twice a month," she said, "basically only mushrooms and marijuana. Coke is too expensive."
Vandal spikers split again

By Kathy McConville
Of the Argonaut

What seemed to be a sure thing upset Mountain West Athletic Conference leader University of Montana turned into a disappointing loss for the University of Idaho volleyball team Friday, as they dropped its five games 15-12, 15-9, 3-15, 9-15 and 7-15 Friday night in Memorial Gym. With the loss in mind, the Lady Vandals took Saturday's opponent, Montana State, and beat them handily in four games, 15-1, 6-15, 16-14 and 15-12.

In Friday's match the Vandals took the court with confidence and surprised the Lady Griz as they took the first two games on strong serving and passing. The Vandals capitalized on UM's weak blocking, overpassed and a slow defense to set the UI in a good position to win.

"We were aggressive, well passed and worked hard until game three," said UI coach Pat Hradetchi, "but in game three we came out flat."

At the beginning of game three, the Lady Griz, as well as head coach Dick Scott looked stunned and very quiet. But their looks were deceiving, as they kept the Vandals off guard and quickly beat them, 15-3. The strong UI serve disappeared, as well as the crisp passing.

Games four and five showed enthusiasm by Terri Flum, but the coaches needed the spark, and the Griz took the match stealthily away from the Vandals.

The men's tennis team proved their dominance over the swim team as they defeated the hapless but energetic aquanauts 21-7 in an entertaining volleyball challenge Saturday night in Memorial Gym.

The exhibition game, played after the UI-Montana State volleyball match, and officiated by volleyball head coach Pam Bradetic, started with a furious serving frenzy as the swimmers jumped to an early lead of 5-0. But a net violation on the swimmers' side gave the tennis team their needed chance to catch up to their foes.

When the tennis team warmed up their potential for victory began to show. First-year coach of the tennis team, Patrick Swafford, was a great factor in his team's performance. Using vocal as well as physical support, coach Swafford even tried to help one of his teammate's serve over the net. Nevertheless, the tennis team appeared to apply their serve-and-volley experience from the tennis court to the volleyball game and held the swim team to two additional points and won the game.

After the victorious point was made (it wasn't exactly known when the 21st point was made), the swimmers immediately requested a retraction of the match, which was denied by the victors. But Frank Burilon, coach of the swimmers was unsatisfied with their performance, and the match was completed.

The losers of the game were given brooms and mops and were directed to clean the gym after the game. No further challenges have been scheduled thus far.

Spikers, (see page 7)

Bradetic and The Lady Vandals, 9-15 and 4-15, "Every position on the floor must work hard," said the disappointed Bradetic, "not five, but six people. Laura Burns came out inspired, Robin Jordan was strong, Kelly Neely was well, and Terri Plum was outstanding. But everyone must contribute when it's needed."

Apparently, the Vandals took Bradetic's advice and gave a total team performance the next evening against Montana State. Game one was a complete blowout, with the excellent serving of Sally Beyers and Kelly Neely.

In game two, the Bobcats took advantage of a confident UI team andulled by 6-15 at MSU had some scrappy defense as well as strong blocking that showed the Bobcats to be better than their 1-5 MWAC standing.

With the loss in mind, the Vandals got in gear and held off MSU with tough defense and came out ahead 16-14. The two Bobcats, Roebuck and Jordan, had strong blocking and hitting and Melissa Varga was a potent defensive and offensive weapon against the Bobcats.

Game four was as close as the score indicated. Freshman Terri Plum seemed to radially enthusiats to the rest of the world. She and her entire team, showed traces of last year's 26-14, MWAC second place team.

Coach Bradetic was happy with Saturday's performance. "We came back after last night's loss and played harder," said Bradetic. "It was encouraging to win the two close games (game 3 and 4); we could have lost to them."

The 16-11 Vandals (4-3 in MWAC) are on the road this weekend, as they hit Boise October 31, then face up to Portland State November 1.

Vandals swim for bucks

The University of Idaho's swim team completed a 24 hour swimming marathon, which averaged out to be 65.75 miles, or 4,627 pool lengths, or 115,675 yards, in hopes of raising a goal of $300 per teammate to cover travelling expenses. According to team member Todd Lind, the marathon, which lasted from 1:30 p.m. Friday to Saturday at the same time, was held to help pay for a challenging sport in the warmth of the pool, no experience necessary, we provide the equipment. The winner tied with five others, Eileen Weaver, Tom LeClair, Roy Breckenridge, Dean Sink and Rex Tabor, but was the week’s winner because of the tie-breaker.

Arg sports writer Greg Kliner went 15 of 20 this week putting him at 101 for 155 for the year. Entries can be turned in at the Tri-State Sporting Good’s counter before noon on Friday.

Son of Mardi Gras makes strange night

By Sarah Kerruish
Of the Argonaut

The full moon was out and some haunting figures came out of the woodwork of Moscow as well. Last Saturday night reality was broken at the Hotel Moscow at the Halloween party, Son of Mardi Gras.

REVIEW

The tradition of the Son of Mardi Gras was established to generate seed money for the celebrated winter Mardi Gras Party which directly benefits the Prichard Gallery. This weekend’s party raised an estimated $1500.

Peter Pan flew through downtown Moscow and transformed it into Never Never Land where Tinker Bell blinked to the music of the Fabulous Ringmaster. Exhilarating art by the Art and Architecture’s Foundation Design class exuded terror and gleeful fear, challenging wanton witches of all ages and classes to See Son, page 19.

Ghouls for CHILD-FIND

By Bryan Clark
Of the Argonaut

Last weekend vampires, witches, warlocks, phantoms and the like were put to a good use for a change. These normally bad-natured and trouble-causing creatures of the night did their part to find missing children.

Targhee Hall, with the help of numerous local sponsors and their dark and mysterious friends, put on a haunted house Thursday and Friday nights last week to raise money for CHILD-FIND.

CHILD-FIND is a national organization that assists parents and law enforcement agencies in retrieving missing children.

The organization brings the faces of missing children to our attention every day by placing them on milk cartons around the nation. In addition Ghouls, page 13.
Faculty go on exhibit

By Sarah Cornick
Of the Argonaut
A UI College of Art and Architecture exhibition is currently showing at the Ridenbaugh Hall. The exhibit features work by painters, graphic and interior designers, sculptors and architects so there are a variety of different exhibits.

REVIEW

Johanna Hays, the gallery director, said that like the recent "X-Change" showing there is something to interest everybody.

The works on display range from the intriguing to the introspective. George Wray's "Light Mounds" is fascinating. A combination of sand mounds and jagged glass is lit up by neon lights for a beautiful effect.

Bill Bowles' "Triple Light" is another curiosity. A large wooden box is compartmentalized into three sections. The bottom of each of the sections is painted a different color and the color is reflected back into the white box. Bowler hopes to have the piece exhibited outdoors by the handball courts.

James Loney's Papa's bag is a wood carving of a bag, baseball glove, and envelope on a desk. I observed many people trying to pick up the envelope thinking someone had absent-mindedly left it there, so realistic was the carving.

George Roberts' galloped, he galloped, we galloped, all three, is a sculpture of horses and riders in welded iron. Most students will be familiar with Roberts' imposing Vancl in the Vandall Lounge of the SUB. The horse sculpture is similarly arresting and many of those I spoke to said it was their favorite exhibit.

An architect's plan is not traditionally thought of as art, although architects will no doubt disagree. Dan Morabito's architectural plan demonstrates the art and creativity that is required to design a building. "Fragments" are collages of paint and paper. Gioen's theme is "the Hollywood Greats." The combination of cast photographs of stars like Bette Davis and a vivid painting create a feeling of decay and dissolution.

Of note amongst the paintings were William L'Hote's untitled gouache of a crocodile, rhinoceros and a grasshopper and his oil painting "Every morning I wake up and know I've been bad."

Westerveld's pastel and cosmic multiples are exquisite.

At the opening of the UI's Faculty Art Exhibit in the Ridenbaugh Music Annex building, freshmen Dad Eddom of Boise and Ted Mabbott of Sun Valley, both plought at Sigma Chi study, galloped. We galloped, all three by faculty member George Roberts.

Every student exhibit this year will take the form of a show, and the student's work will be on display in the SUB's Art Gallery. Students are encouraged to participate in the exhibit. Students will have their own shows in separate locations and at least one show will be open to the public.

The exhibit will be open from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Monday through Friday and evenings until 8 p.m. and weekends from noon until 5 p.m.

To help bring the search to children, the CHILD-FIND provides counseling services for parents.

The haunted house was a first for Targhee and according to Jeff Pullin, the event's organizer, it was going to be a yearly occurrence. Pullin said, "the idea for a fundraiser for charity, by the ball was being thought of for a while, and someone brought up the idea of a haunted house, so we went with it."

Finding businesses to help sponsor the event wasn't very difficult, Pullin said. Among the local companies that added the "house" were the Corner Pocket, Pay and Save, the Capricorn, Skipper's, Hoyt's, Moscow Florists, Bankin Robbins and Digital Acoustics Limited.

The money the hall made will be donated to the CHILD-FIND on a national level, but, according to Pullin, "Some will find its way back to our area."

As to how much was actually made for the organization, the total will not be known until all bills are counted this week. "We had between 250 and 300 people come through the house total for both nights," Pullin said. He added though that "we had no specific goal in mind, having never done this before, but we are very happy with the results."

He expressed the feeling of the whole hall that the haunted house will help CHILD-FIND annually.

"What do you think of the party?"

Fidel Castro was asked while he was puffing vehemently on his Cuban cigar.

"Wild stuff," he muttered through his black beard. Fidel was going to elaborate but his attention was caught by Tina Turner.

And on what other occasion could you risk the appearance of Yoda, dance with a pea, chat with Einstein, see Chastity and Lust in the flesh or be accosted by Ralph, Harry and Edna just over from the Holiday Inn?

People took on the characteristics of their new identities, fulfilling the roles of star performer and audience without batting an eye, reading the script.

The Costume Contest allowed the crowd to cheer Greg Harrill as Tina to first place, the indescribable Blues Brothers to second and Mark Consey as the Potato Head to third. A box of talking crayons and the Vw was earned honored mention.

The bewitching hour arrived to send the creatures scurrying out onto the street. "Off to see the Wizard" color-coordinated himself with his kitchen tablecloth and conjured up a continuation of the magic with Young Adolph and an Electric Man on Eight Street. The last survivor's impression was, "It was just like walking through MTV."

UI Phonathon over half-way to goal

By Richard Burke
Of the Argonaut

Quickly! How do you make $150,000 or more for the UI in four weeks? If you are familiar with the UW Alumni Fund, you know how they do it; they hold a phon-a-thon.

This year’s phon-a-thon, which is just past the halfway mark, is doing better than ever. The event started Oct. 7, and as of Oct. 27, more than $100,000 had been collected.

It would appear that this year’s goal of $150,000 is well in reach. However, in order to reach it, continued support is needed.

“The response from the living groups who have participated has been terrific,” said Steve Hetten, student co-chairman for this year’s drive. “Reaching and surpassing our $150,000 goal is contingent upon continuing to receive support that we’ve had up to this point.”

The participation goal for living groups is 100 percent. At present, the participation includes 100 percent of all fraternities and sororities, and about 30 percent of all residence halls.

In addition, Alpha Phi Omega, the Intercollegiate Knights and the Student-Alumni Relations Board have also contributed toward the effort.

Pi Kappa Alpha, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Phi Gamma Delta have the highest pledge totals so far.

One aspect that many people overlook, said Hetten, is that while people are calling they are also meeting fellow students and faculty, as well as alumni.

“The atmosphere is very relaxed. As you look around the room, you can see people talking with the graduates and generally enjoying themselves,” Hetten said.

Another aspect of each phone call made is that alumni can find out what is going on at the university since they’ve been there. Callers are encouraged to have a good time while talking with all alumni. “If they want to know how the Vandals are doing, or what events are going on, we just talk with them. It really adds a personal touch to the conversation.”

With seven evening slots yet to be filled, the Annual Fund is looking for all types of organizations to help. Any group interested in helping out should contact Annual Fund Director Linda Williams at 885-7099, Steve Hetten at 882-1031, or John Shaw at 892-1145.

In the past, the university’s fund raising entity, the UI Foundation, has used the proceeds to purchase microcomputers, to contribute to various scholarly endeavors and to purchase library books, in addition to various other purchases. The drive is structured so that phone call recipients can designate where their pledge is to go. Pledges can also be undesignated as to their eventual use.

This year’s event has over 50 local merchants contributing various gifts to its participants. The gifts, which are given to persons making calls for the phon-a-thon, range from discount coupons to complimentary meals to free lodging at hotels.

In addition, to all these incentives, all callers will receive a free five minute phone call to anywhere in the United States. The biggest incentive, said Hetten, is that all the money received goes back into the university so that everyone benefits.

Dose, a junior in elementary and secondary education from Wamego, Kansas, said, "I chose Gamma Phi because there's no longer a letter to Ames apologizing for not following proper channels and outlining the plans to make reparations to the UI. In the letter, Westover says that we are sincere in wishing to stop the production and distribution of the "Vandal Gold" which we do feel though that the UI and us both can benefit from this kind of booster idea."

The winery has agreed to cease all production of the beverage and sell what remains on the shelves of Moscow area supermarkets. In addition, Dose, president, has promised to pay the university $6.5 percent of the sales on all wine that has and will be sold until current supplies run out.

According to Ames, this is the going rate for the use of UI copyrighted symbols. The money will, however, be going to a general fund administered through the bookstores instead of to the athletic department.

But if the wine is a good money making venture for the university, why not use it? Ames said "In its present form and location, I can see no possibility of it affecting the avenue of revenue. The product, as it exists now, is too many ambiguities in it, as well as the possible complications, which would occur as a result of the UI being associated with alcohol.

get out of hand," he said. "It takes a strong leader to keep people from getting on the bandwagon and encouraging others to do the same." Pierce sees his competition as stiff, "But my biggest advantage is running independently. I think running on our own gives us an advantage. If a president from team A gets elected and a vice president from team B gets elected, they would have a difficult working relationship." Pierce said he and Mike Trul would work together if both were elected. He said, "I don't know Gito (White) so I can't say.

Idaho driving force, have been involved in 33.2 percent of alcohol-related accidents in 1984.

Nineteen year olds had three times as many Driving Under the Influence (DUI) problems as all other drivers. According to Pierce, in states where the drinking age has recently been raised to 21, the accident and DUI rate has generally lowered.

On the other side of the coin, Bob Bennett, owner of Bennett's distributing company in Moscow, claims that his sales to 21 year olds have increased 30 percent in sales the first year the 21 year drinking age is in effect.

"We'll go broke together," said Bennett, "and we have a plan to make an impact on area drinking establishments as well as distributors."

"Let's face it," he said, "it's really going to hurt them [area bars]. There's no way they're going to make it."
