UI ROTC student poses for ad campaign

A UI Army ROTC cadet was chosen to participate in the national advertising campaign. An advertising team, from the New York company, flew to Moscow on Wednesday and spent all day Thursday photographing Bright on the UI campus.

Bright, a junior in bacteriology, was selected to participate in the advertising campaign along with a cadet from Fort Lewis, WA, last summer. Fifty out of 4,000 cadets were chosen to be interviewed by the advertising agency.

Bright said he was very surprised when the agency contacted him a week and a half ago, and did not know why he had been selected. Kate Zobel, the accounting executive of N.W. Ayer, said they were looking for somebody who would portray the ROTC in "a light that illustrates the ROTC as a part of the college experience." Specific qualities they sought were academic ability and sincere pride in the ROTC.

"The army is a good place to start in life," Bright said. "They have taught me many skills like time management, responsibility and organizational skills. Also the ROTC builds confidence and character.

The advertisement will be published in over 34 magazines, including Time and Sports Illustrated. The full-page ad will feature a large picture of Bright on a black background, saying, "My grade point average jumped from 2.6 to 3.4 since ROTC showed me how to make the most of my time." Inset at the top of the advertisement will be small pictures of Bright on the UI campus.

"0800 hours, Thursday. The Arboretum. The agency originally wanted to take pictures of the Twin Falls native with his knapsack at the top of a mountain, but when they realized that Idaho, particularly Moscow, in all mountains, they settled for a picturesque path on campus. Zobel said they wanted the lumber jack shirt image, but then they were dissatisfaction because Bright did not own a checked shirt and had to borrow from Maj. Richard Taylor.

Pertaining took about an hour, and it involved the photographer, James Salzano, taking Polaroid shots to check the exposure. Salzano was the photographer for the latest Timberline ads. The shooting of the photographs took an hour and a half. Bright, wearing jeans, checked shirt and a back pack, ducked under the same leafy branch at least 50 times. "Chim up left bit, hold it, hold it, freeze, smile," said Salzano repeatedly.

Bright is used to taking commands and accepted the directions without complaint. Salzano said he was great to work with.

Another case of adjournment sent the Outdoor Rentals bill to the ASUI Finance Committee for consideration at the special Senate session Friday.

ASUI Vice President Mike Trail said the purpose of the special meeting was to put bills on the agenda. One bill, number 133, proposes reductions in income projections for Idaho Educational Adventurers, the Argonaut, Advertising, Sub Films, the Gem of the Mountains and the Photo Bureau.

The other bill, number 135, proposes transferring funds from the Outdoor Rentals to Capital Reserve, and instructing Outdoor Rentals to hold back $4,905 worth of previously approved rental equipment purchases.

The administration put a temporary hold on the transfer of money to the Reserve and Outdoor Rentals that the ASUI had granted until "the fiscal year 1986 revenue projections are revised and necessary adjustments are made in the ASUI budget are made."

"With the addition of Senate bill 135," ASUI President Jane Freund said at the meeting, "Don Almos (of the Financial Affairs office) has assured me the Turfing and Outdoor Rentals bills will be released."

She encouraged the Senate to take some kind of action on the bills, particularly the Outdoor Rentals bill because bids will be coming in for the equipment. The Outdoor Programs wants to hear.

"Some students came to speak to us about the possible change in the passage of the Outdoor Rentals bill and to oppose the transfer of $4,905 from Outdoor Rentals to Capital Reserve. One student asked the Senate, "How do you figure you're going to make more interest by putting this money back into the reserve than by getting $2,000 a year for five years for $10,000?"

The Senate gave $10,000 to the Outdoor Rentals by reducing the Capital Reserve on Oct. 16.

Sen. Mike Felton responded to the question. "It's obvious to us that we'd get a better return by putting it (the money) in Outdoor Rentals, but we're running out of money fast and if the Arg, for example, goes in the red, we can take it out of Capital Reserve," he said. We're just trying to keep in the black.

Speaking against the passage of $10,105 to Outdoor Rentals by reducing the Capital Reserve, Freund said, "When we were discussing the whole shorter issue two days ago, I kept hearing over and over again, we can't take it out of the General Reserve, we can't let it get that low. All of a sudden we can pull this money out of our reserve accounts and we're going to be okay. I don't remember 20 or 30 thousand dollars being dropped in our laps Thursday or today. We're still in the same position we were Wednesday night."

She said, "I would love to give him [Bennett, director of the Outdoor Program] the full $10,000, but I believe we've got some capital outlay worries in addition to Outdoor Programs. I believe we have KUSI and anything else that comes down the pike. We can't afford to take our CR too low."

Freund moved for immediate consideration of the Outdoor Rentals bill. She said, "Some kind of action is needed on this bill."

Sen. Scott Speelman followed the motion with a motion to adjourn the meeting.

It was then voted to adjourn the meeting.

Mike Trail said after the meeting that the adjournment sent the Outdoor Rentals bill to Finance, postponing any action.

"There was no official motion on the floor except for the motion to send it to committee," he said.

"Right now we're just sitting back waiting for the bids to come in. The money has not been spent yet."

Freund said she was upset that the Senate did not take any action on the bill.

"We could have taken care of this last Wednesday night, but the adjournment politics happened," she said. "We can act on it Wednesday night but it may be too late."
Harrison, who operates a consulting firm in Virginia that specializes in agricultural business management, finance, trade and development, said that there are some signs for optimism in the stagnated market.

He said the weakening U.S. dollar, continued European imports and decreasing European subsidies are signs that things will get better.

Harrison said the United States must develop a basic marketing strategy: controlling the price by quantity of the product, the product itself, physical distribution and promotion worldwide.

Joe Anderson, past president of the UI Agricultural Consulting Council, said the United States cannot afford an agriculture industry that is not competitive and strong.

He said the farmer has the responsibility to ensure his competitive position through marketing and management skills, but that the scientific community has the responsibility for technological development, and that the public is responsible through government for providing a sound monetary and fiscal policy.

David Anderson spoke of producing new crops for agriculture.

He said Lubritz has a way of combining modern genetics with classical breeding techniques to make new cultures through chemical processes. New sunflower oils, for example, could be produced for the industrial and food markets, he said. Those wouldn't go Ronald as quickly on the food market, and they would produce a highly purified chemical for the industrial market.

Ron Curtis said that even though U.S. assistance in developing countries towards self-sufficiency should be reduced, there is a smaller market for U.S. products, the facts show the trend.

Evidence tells us that it helps U.S. producers to help other producers in other nations to develop," he said.

He said the developing cities spend their new increased incomes on food, but this demand is greater than their agriculture can produce in the short run, or their prices aren't competitive enough.

'Liberal arts stands on its own two feet'

By Eric Fleming
Charlton Argonaut

There is a definite place for the liberal arts student in the business world, Chester Delaney, vice president for marketing in Link’s Group, said Friday evening.

The keynote speaker for Letters and Science Day, in his address titled "The Liberal Arts and Business," said that a longitudinal study done by AT&T proved that liberal arts graduates did just as well as their technically trained colleagues.

"It proved that the liberal arts student is more than able to hold his own," he said.

Delaney's experience with liberal arts began in college where he studied liberal arts. He taught for 10 years as a high school and college teacher before he moved into the world of high technology.

He started as a computer programer, and is now manager of a systems development division at Chase Manhattan. He also writes and edits publications about systems management.

Past experience he said that the business world is looking for graduates who can deal with the turbulence and change more than their narrowly focused counterparts in specialized fields," he said.

"Liberal arts give people the ability to make judgments and communicate," he said. The business field is looking for people who have good communication skills, he said.

"We don't want to educate people in basic skills," he said. Delaney said that the important thing is to have basic skills like writing and other communication skills in good working order.

"We can teach the technical skills better than any school," he said.

Delaney said that employers are also looking for people who are flexible and innovative, he said the short term-

"The liberal arts majors show greater growth potential eventual than their more specialized counterparts and can be trained to make excellent vice presidents and thinkers too," he said.

But liberal arts students should not be overlooked as merely a career, he said. "Liberal arts teaches the student how to deal with life," he said, "it teaches more important than a job."
El Salvadorans show university's plight

By Laurel Darrow
Of the Argonaut

Although El Salvador's government is supposed to be democratic, it violates the people's human rights, said students from the University of El Salvador.

Antonio Quezada and Rodolfo Rosales, student leaders at the UES, spoke at the UI Friday and Saturday in a program titled "Quest for Peace."

Speaking through a translator, Quezada said El Salvador's president, Napoleon Duarte, has repressed the people, rather than searching for true peace.

People in El Salvador cannot organize, express themselves freely or even think freely, he said. "The Salvadorian family still is living in a state of waiting to be allowed to live in dignity," he said.

The University of El Salvador, whose purpose is to create professionals to serve the Salvadoran people, has been forced to criticize the actions that the Salvadoran government has been following.

Because of its position, the university has become "the most punished institution in the country, one of the governments that have controlled the country," he said.

The military began a campaign to eliminate the university shortly after Duarte joined the junta, Quezada said. On June 26, 1980, the military invaded the campus and killed or captured many students, professors and workers.

They left buildings without walls or floors, they left classrooms without desks, they left the library with only "useless" books that were written in English, Quezada said.

The university, professors and workers were barred from the campus, but in 1985 they began teaching secretly, campus, for class.

"We had to rent apartments, buy basic equipment, and you might ask what money we did this. This was done in two ways. First, students agreed to pay an extra fee... Second, the workers and professors of the university agreed to give part of their salaries to pay for this," he said.

Several European universities also donated equipment, he said.

In May 1984 they were allowed to return to the campus, and their first task was to clean it up.

"We began a campaign, stone by stone, people reconstructing the campus."

Although they had use of the university again, they did not have any financial support from the government, he said.

This angered university leaders because the country's constitution states that the government will allocate funds to maintain the universities and to ensure and expand their work.

"This is what our constitution says and this is what Duarte government refuses to do," he said.

Not only is the university malnourished, but students, professors and workers have been threatened, he said. Recently, a medical student and a nurse were killed and their bodies were found in a river, he said.

And on Oct. 9 a professor was killed on campus, he said. "This is the reality that the Salvadoran people are living, that the university is living, and this is the reality that the American people refuse to recognize."

Despite the dangers facing them, UES faculty, staff and students continue to work for peace, Quezada said. "The students realize they must "search for a peaceful solution to end this civil war.""

U.S. aid to Duarte's government only prolongs the war, he said. The military is confident it will continue to receive U.S. aid, and therefore it does not have to negotiate with the guerrillas, he said. If U.S. aid were reduced or stopped, the government would "feel pressured to look for a political solution to the conflict," he said.

The members of Duarte's government are not interested in a peaceful solution — they think war is the only way to solve the country's problems, said Rosales.

Quezadas said Duarte's government spends $1.5 million a day on the war, and that money is American money. People in the United States, Rosales noted, do not know how much money from the United States is spent on bombs, helicopters, planes, machine guns and bullets.

"We are the ones who are paying; we are the ones who are sacrificing," he said.

"This university gives every support to the government, especially to the national police. We give all the support to the government," Rosales said.

Quezadas said University students have been forced to avoid declaring their major in the United States, Com- munist. "We don't know if there will be..." he said.

"All the governments of El Salvador have been the same in that anyone who opposes them has been immediately called Communist," Rosales said.

"This is ridiculous to say that Napoleon Duarte is a good guy, he just doesn't have any power," he said.

Lit Compton, of the Committee on Solidarity with the People in El Salvador, accompanied the students to Moscow. She asked several ways that the audience might help the UES.

Student university declarations and resolutions from governing bodies of the students, faculty and administration have "a big impact when [those] are sent to Duarte," she said.

Telegrams sent in protest of specific actions can also have a big impact, she said. Donations would also be appreciated, she said.

UI Centennial Project ideas form contest

Some creative student can win a semester's fees from the Academic Committee of the UI's UI 1986 Centennial Commission.

Committee members want students to come up with ideas for academic projects that "are innovative and have a lasting influence" on the university for the next 100 years.

First prize is a full-time resident fees for the spring 1986 semester. The contest is open to all students who are enrolled during the fall 1985 semester, fall or part-time, graduate or undergraduate, resident or non-resident. If a non-resident wins, he will have to pay the non-resident portion of fees.

Second prize is a $100 cerdiscounts to the University Bookstore.

Roger Wallins, acting chairman of the Academic Committee, said the project should be something that in the year 2089 that people can look back and say this is something that was being done for the centennum.

The project can be anything that would contribute to the academic excellence and atmatic involvement of the university, said Wallins and two other members of the committee, Ralph Nielsen and John Hult.

On a sheet of paper students should write their idea, name, student identification number, address and telephone number. Entries must be sub-mited at the library loan desk by 4 p.m. Dec. 2.

UI quick start surprises EWU, 42-21

UI's Sloan throws for 405 yards

By Kathy McConihay
Or The Argonaut

The Vandal football team had something to prove this weekend in their ninth game of the season against the Eastern Washington Eagles. Number one, they had to prove to their publics that the 1985 Vandals are indeed a viable championship squad. Number two, they had to prove to themselves that they are capable of winning, and often at that.

At the end of the fourth quarter it was evident that the Vandals did accomplish their task by steamrolling EWU, 42-21, and rising in Division I-AA ranking from the eight to the fifth spot.

"We did have something to prove," said defensive tackle Joe Talib, who helped the Vandal defenses shut down the Eagle running game. And prove something they did.

The difference was in the defense. Going into Saturday's game, the Vandals defense had allowed an average of 124
rushing yards, but the Eagles were allowed a measly 46 yards in the Kibbie Dome. Most of Eastern's yardage came from the air, where 286 yards were racked up.

The Vandals dominated the Eagles from the kick-off, when Vandal safety Ernest Sanders recovered the ball dropped by EWU's Craig Richardson. One play later, Eric Varber was in the end zone with a 25 yard pass from quarterback Nick Sloan. After the extra point kicked by Brian Deccio, the clock showed 13 seconds had eclapsed.

The Vandals defense promptly shut down the eagles for the remainder of the game. In the first half, the Vandals scored 40 points against the Eagles' zero.

"I felt we had the momentum," UI head coach Dennis Erickson said about the quick 14 points. "The intensity level after the first couple of series was high, and we were playing well."

The Vandal offense ran option routes, which allowed Sloan to unload to an open man. According to Erickson, Eastern took away the short passing game last year. This year Idaho reacted to Eastern's defense and took advantage of double coverage of Varber to unload to tight end Scott Auker and Nelson Washington.

"We haven't used it (option route) much the whole year," said Erickson, "but we needed to do it to their defense."

One of Idaho's plays had substantial meaning when the Vandals went for it at fourth and one foot. "If I was thinking, we might have kicked," said the tired but exuberant Erickson,
"but I was gunned up and wanted to move the football.
Sometimes decisions are based on emotions." Sloan handled the

Rugby:
Blue Mountain split at home
By Tom Liberman
Off the Argonaut

The UI rugby club's first home match of the season was held Saturday at Idaho's Memorial Field as the club split games with Washington State University over the weekend.

After losing twice at WSU the Idaho team was hoping to redeem themselves on their own pitch this Saturday. The UI field is longer and wider than the WSU pitch and thus is more conducive to a quicker team.

The match started off well for Idaho as they played even rugby with the Cougars for the first 20 minutes. Idaho got a try in the 10th minute when Larew scored and the conversion attempt was missed.

Idaho began to control the ball well and got to within inches of the Coug's touch line on three occasions but were not able to push it in.

On one occasion they got it in only to have it stripped by the Cougars and be taken out for a five yard penalty.

This seemed to take the heart out of the UI ruggers as WSU drove deep into their territory and scored a try quickly after the last close call.

WSU then ran a reverse play, similar to Eastern Washington's punt return, for another score and went into half with a 10-0 lead.

The second half went much the way as the first as the Cougars pried on Idaho's three more scores and Idaho could not manage to break through WSU's try area.

Finally, with about 10 minutes remaining in the game, inside Center Tom Ryden punched the ball over the try line for the only score Idaho was to get in the game.

After the completion of the first game a 35 minute match was played between the two experienced players going in for both sides.

Things looked grim again for Idaho as WSU went around the left end for a try, eight minutes into the game, for a 4-0 lead.

But through the Hereford and the UI's 5th advantage the UI broke through the middle and scored a try for a 2-0 lead for the third time in the match and the conversion try in the middle of the field.

With about five minutes to go in the match a ball was kicked from the back of the pack and Idaho had the ball within inches of the WSU touch line when Hooker Mike Healy handed off to Butzy Lewy who drove in for another score.

This time they almost got a score late in the game when they drove down into Idaho territory but a tough defense stopped the Cougars from gaining the try and Idaho held on for the 12-4 victory.

Brett & Don Who?
Greg Kelmer

I know it's been a week, but it really got to me that the American League West Kansas City Royals are the World Champions.

It shocked the hell out of me with the Cardinals nose-dive. I guess it's alright though, I don't think I could have stomached the Budweiser commercials, "Joaquin Andujar, this Buds for you..."

"Join the Mines." more like the "Who's me."

Two of the people who probably had the most to do with this "Massachusetts" probably weren't the main topic of conversation around our dinner table.

I asked a few people around campus, "Who is Brett Sabahen?

"He must be in sports, you're that Kramer guy so much for my argument from the Argonaut," one UI coed said. "Does he play for Boise State?"

"I have no idea, who is he?" was the most common reply.

"He's the guy that is Al Michalski, Tim McCargar, Jim Palmer and Reggie Jackson told us a million times, "just think, three years ago he was pitching in the California state championship in Dodger Stadium and now he's in the World Series."

Yeah, he's the Series MVP, that's Most Valuable Player not Most Vorable Person.

The other world reknown subject about the seven game series was Don Denker.

If you thought Sabahen was a mystery to most people, Denker is right up there with "What is the meaning of life.

Yeah, Denker is that umpire who's blind in one eye and can't see out of the other one.

Denker was the guy who called Jorge Orta "safe" at first, when even the fans in Bob Ucker's seats could tell the guy was nailed cold. The series should have ended right there, the umpires robbed the Buch family a rings.

Speaking of robbers, did you hear who was named arbitrator between the umpire's union and the leagues. Yep, of Richard Nixon is back in the news. If there is someone who can get the umpire some extra cash to afford some eyes glasses, it's our beloved Erich Deck.

Denker was also the guy who got the rumble going in game 7 I admit that the ball four call was a little tight to the lady. but that ball three got the black. Gotta give Denker credit for some things. Though I have had some problems walking that with the hot-blooded Latino Andujar staring me down.

I think Card manager White Herzog knew what he was doing when he stuck Andujar in with the Cards down 7-0 in the 11th go of a finale.

He knew they were frustrated. I can't remember when Andujar won a ballgame. Whitey knew it wouldn't take much to get Joaquin fired up, what better way to get out of the slough than to get thrown out. Your plan worked well Whitey, maybe the writers took that into account when they voted you Manager of the Year.

My upmost regards to Sabahen and his RC cronies but Denker, open your eyes, you missed a hell of a Series.

Volleyball:
Vandals drop two
By Edby McClellan
Off the Argonaut

The UI volleyball team had a disappointing road trip last weekend when it came back empty handed against Mountain West Athletic Conference opponents Boise State and Portland State.

"Our morale is still high and we're definitely in it, I," insissted UI volleyball coach Pam Bradetich after her squad's two match loss this weekend. "We control our destiny."

Friday's match against the Broncos cost the Vandals off guard in the first game, and BSU coasted to a 2-15 win. The Vandals rallied in games two and three, taking the latter of 15-12 decisions, but fell in games four and five, 17-15 and 12-15.

"BSU came out extremely pumped," said Bradetich, "but we had extra, extra efforts." Outside hitter Laura Burns was injured in the second game, and without their best defensive player and passer, the Vandals didn't get the momentum to pull out ahead.

ball to Todd Hines, who drove up the middle for the two points, the first down and the lead for Idaho.

The Eagles "didn't lay down at all," said Erickson, especially when Levin Lauer returned punt 72 yards for the Eagles' first touchdown. But the Vandals quickly answered back with a pass to Nelson Washington.

The first half ended with a 28-12 score. The Vandals were able to make the game a close one. The only other points Ewu scored came on a two yard run by Jamie Todd. With two minutes left in the contest. Washingtons missed a 23 yard field goal.

The match against Portland State was a top-sided affair, where Idaho "had efforts, but they were too far, too inconsistent," said Bradetich. Scores for the match were 5-15, 5-15 and 4-15.

Idaho has two weeks of conference play left, and Bradetich believes "everyone's capable of breaking everyone else." Currently tied for fourth place with Idaho State and Idaho State, the Vandals still fighting for their team goal, to make it into the NCAA-West Regionals.

"The upper classmen have high expectations, and we need the freshmen to rise to the occasion and join in the expectations," stressed the second year coach whose team now stands at 16-13 and 4-6 in MWAC play.

"We need to look for ways to win," said Bradetich. "There's no time to lose."

Idaho's next matches are again on the road next weekend against Montana State University and the University of Montana.

I Love the Argonaut with a passion, I still say the Cougars wear cry babies, and I believe that the Cougars, and the Vandals have bigger concerns on their minds."

Swimmers place highly

The UI swim team showed promising performances this weekend when they placed second in a field of six teams at the Husky Relays in Seattle. Losing only to host University of Washington with 130 points, the Vandals swimmers beat out U of Puget Sound(70), U of Victoria(65), U of British Columbia(60), and the U of Alberta(28). Idaho scored 74 points.

The Vandals placed first in the 200 yard free style relay with a time of 1:29.19, which set a new school record. Swimmers Robert Roga, Casey Edwards, John David and Kenny Smith all contributed to the win. Roga and Smith were named the meet’s outstanding swimmers.

The 500 free style team was touched out by the Huskies, giving them a second place by three tenths of a second. Roga, Smith, David and David Zimmerman were the paddlers.

The Vandals also placed second in the 400 meter free, with members Zimmerman, David, Smith and Richard Root making contributions. They were beaten again by UW, this time by two seconds.

This was the first time the Vandals made their appearance at the Husky Relays, and their performance surpassed Idaho coach Burlison. “If we would have finished fourth or fifth, that would have been great,” commented Burlison. “I was surprised.”

The Idaho swimmers then partook in a dual meet against UW Saturday afternoon, where the Huskies proved dominant by out swimming Idaho, 62-26. Top UI swimmer was Richard root, who won two events against top competition in the 200 individual medley and the 200 backstroke. “We’re extremely proud of our effort,” said Burlison. The Vandals swimmers’ next meet is Saturday, Nov. 9 at Ellensburg, WA, for the Central Relays.

The women’s cross country team traveled to Bozeman, Montana to compete in the Mountain West Athletic Conference Championships.

The meet was held on Saturday and as expected the powerful Montana State team took first place honors with 48 points. The UI team finished in a strong second place with Vandals’ Sherrrie Crang and Janet Beaudry leading the way.

Crang took second place in the event with a sparkling time of 18:01. She was closely followed by teammate Beaudry who managed third with a time of 18:06.

The Idaho team finished only nine points behind the Bobcats, much closer than they had managed earlier in the year and head coach Scott Lurek was optimistic for the NCAA District meet later this year.

The next meet for both the men’s and women’s cross country squads will be the District VII meet that will take place in Boise, Id. November 16.

The Women’s cross country team traveled to Bozeman, Montana to compete in the Mountain West Athletic Conference Championships.

The meet was held on Saturday and as expected the powerful Montana State team took first place honors with 48 points. The UI team finished in a strong second place with Vandals’ Sherrrie Crang and Janet Beaudry leading the way.

Crang took second place in the event with a sparkling time of 18:01. She was closely followed by teammate Beaudry who managed third with a time of 18:06. The Idaho team finished only nine points behind the Bobcats, much closer than they had managed earlier in the year and head coach Scott Lurek was optimistic for the NCAA District meet later this year.

The next meet for both the men’s and women’s cross country squads will be the District VII meet that will take place in Boise, Id. November 16.

Danceworks II had good variety

By Kelvin Letts
Of the Argonaut

This weekend’s Danceworks II performance by the University of the Arts Dance Theater successfully combined many dance styles and varieties of music.

The different varieties of dance and music included Mexican, modern, tap, jazz and ballet. Some dancers performing in each category of dance were performers who seemed to have a specific talent for that category. For the most part, Danceworks II was successful because of this added air of professionalism.

"Pleasure in Mexico," was choreographed by Isadlo Duff. The selection was divided into two parts. "El Gavilán," or the chicken hawk, and "El Tiltlingo-Lingo," or a special bird. For "El Gavilán," the four dancers were authentic Mexican fiesta clothes — the women’s dresses were full-trimmed in bright colors, and the men wore dark pants, light shirts and Mexican hats. The women, with flowers in their hair, circled around the stage, their dresses billowing around them and their male partners.

The scene came straight out of a courtyard in old Mexico. In "El Tiltlingo-Lingo," Duff performed alone in a dance that had a tap origin. Her quick steps, swirling dress and the upbeat Mexican music made the dance enjoyable to watch. "Toward Unity," was choreographed by Buffy Martin-Bretta, Modern music, with the use of guitar and drums respectively, created a sense of ease and later a sense of foreboding. The dancers, in flower print dresses, used ballet techniques in unison and formed circles to provide a feeling of unity.

Greek houses have a haunting night for UNICEF

By Bryna Clark
Of the Argonaut

Halloween is usually recognized as a time for causing trouble, scaring youngsters and other equally disastrous activities. UNICEF, an international organization that helps children and champions their causes, uses this night of ghosts and goblins for another, more beneficial purpose.

Through the efforts of three Greek groups last Thursday, UNICEF furthered its cause. Alpha Gamma Delta and Kappa Gamma sororities hit the streets that night, donation boxes in hand, to raise money trick or treating. Meanwhile, Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity put on its ninth annual haunted house.

KUOI broadcasts live jazz tonight

By Nellie Letiata
Of the Argonaut

This week's "Live from the Lobby" broadcast by KUOI-FM tonight at 6 will feature a four-piece jazz group called the "E-Jon Band" tonight.

The broadcast will last about an hour, according to Ed Ulman, organizer for the group, and will be held in the KUOI lobby.

Besides Ulman, Jon Anderson, Alec Hurt and Mary Wells make up the jazz group. Ulman plays the trombone, Anderson plays piano, Hurt plays the bass and Wells plays the drums. Their first initials form the name of the group and were created by Wells.

The pieces to be played tonight include "Green Dolphin Street," "Just Friends (Just Friend)," "My Secret Love," "Blue Seven," "Thieves of Wine and Roses," "All Blues," "Moment of Sorrow," "Perimeter," "Angel Eyes" and "Another Blues." Ulman and Anderson

Ulman and Anderson said Ulman is a UI sophomore majoring in trombone performance. Anderson is a sophomore majoring in education major. Hurt is a graduate student and Wells is an elementary school teacher specializing in elementary music.

Anderson, who has been a part of the group for 10 years, said he has been in two or three other performances besides KUOI's broadcast.

Together, their purpose was somewhat hard to understand.

"Steam Heat," choreographed by Bob Fosse, was an excerpt from The Moscow Community Theatre production of "Pajama Game." The three dancers were dressed in his trademark, black jackets, white shirts, bow ties and bowler hats. This selection was once the nightmare of Danceworks II when dancers were forced to sing along.

"Steam Heat" was a jazz piece accompanied by Janet Olsen on piano. Pamela Stilel.

DATING EXAMINED

The Master's Production Company (MPC) will present The Great American Relationship...a comical look at US at 9 tonight at the Sigma Chi house. The no-stop revue of songs, sketches and monologues provide a satirical look at the effects of popular values on the average American man and woman. MPC is a professional drama troupe from San Diego and is sponsored by the local chapter of Campus Crusade for Christ International.

They have traveled throughout the United States for the past four years, and use thought-provoking and entering drama to address issues facing today's college students.

The show will last approximately 70 minutes.
