Craig says student aid cuts needn't be so deep

By Douglas Jones

Congressman Larry Craig said that Congress is to blame for deep cuts in student financial aid, not the Gramm-Rudman Act itself.

Craig said the act gave congress the choice of cutting programs across the board to reach the targeted reductions or having deep cuts in 57 percent of federal programs — Congress failed to act so the prescribed cuts went into effect.

Student aid and other education programs were part of the 27 percent.

Craig said education should not have to bear that much of the cuts: "I thought education ought to be equal to all other programs from social security to defense. But in other words all programs should be subject."

"And if we (Congress) had done that you wouldn't have seen any major cuts, you would have just seen a freezing across the board to arrive at the deficit target," Craig said.

Craig said that he and three other congressmen have introduced legislation that would freeze the 1987 budget at the 1986 level. Craig explained that if Congress passes those bills and expects increases in tax revenue to come in, then the savings will match the 1987 Gramm-Rudman spending targets "right on the nose."

Craig said that Congress needs to refrain from passing more cut programs, as the realization of the economy is producing increased tax payments — all that is to be done is to freeze spending at current levels and soon the revenues will catch up.

Craig called the U.S. Senate's failure to pass a balanced budget last week "a bit of a setback," and said the passage of the Gramm-Rudman Act probably was to blame as it "sabotaged the impact for a short time."

But it will pass someday soon, Craig said "because Congress has not passed its spending habit."

Craig said that he thinks Congress will meet the reduced spending targets set in Gramm-Rudman, either by mandating cuts themselves or by the law taking effect, for just a couple of years.

"We will ultimately have a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget, and I think it will come in the next two or three years," Craig said.

"I'm not going to give up, but I guess I'm also a realist in saying that if Congress adheres to Gramm-Rudman and meets the guidelines, then I think the reality of a balanced budget in the near future is less. If we fail or stumble in any way to meet these guidelines, I think the American people will demand it (a balanced budget amendment)," Craig said.

Craig said that he spoke to the Idaho Argonaut yesterday in an exclusive interview in which subjects ranged from federal cuts of student financial aid, a balanced budget amendment, military aid to the contras and his outlook on the upcoming elections.

This article covers the education cuts. Gramm-Rudman effects and the chance of a balanced budget amendment passing Congress. Friday's issue will contain the Congress's views on Nicaragua and the 1986 Idaho elections.

Craig will be on campus today to speak to two political science classes and later to the student body of Moscow High School.

Idaho's legal drinking age was lowered to 17 by an overlooked amendment of a controversial bill that was passed by the State Legislature in last-minute action before adjournment Friday.

"We're going to ask the governor to veto the bill when it gets to his desk," said state Sen. Earl Crystal.

Apparently the Republican majority in both the House and the Senate were caught off guard when Democratic inserted a provision in Rep. Myron Jones' bill which prohibits educators from advocating homosexual lifestyles.

The Senate debate, which saw the bill pass 24-7, was absent of the heated exchanges that were seen during House debate early in the session.

The change was sponsored by Rep. Mary Lou Reed, D-Coeur d'Alene, during a meeting of the House Education Committee. It passed the committee unanimously without debate; most committee members said they thought the amendment widened the scope of the bill. "They (the Democrats) told us that the amendment made the statute applicable to private as well as public schools," said Jones, adding "I never really read it.

Since the Legislature adjourned last Friday for the year, the bill was stopped only by the governor's veto or by legislative leaders calling for a special session.

By Gov. John Evans does not veto or sign the bill by noon today the bill will become law without his signature.

Evans, who was in Rupert Monday, could not be reached for comment, but officials in his office in Boise said they were trying to locate him.

Several lawmakers expressed concern on how this change might be seen by the Reagan Administration.

"In the year the president is trying to unify the nation's drinking age at 11 we become the only state in the nation to lower the age, and to 17. It's like a slap in the face," said Sen. Milton Murphy.

Many local bar owners were dismayed at the change. "We didn't want the age to rise or dropped," Michael Lanni of Lanni's Bar & Grill said. "We think the age should be dropped, but we're surprised."

Several bar owners are going to have a problem at the end of the month when we starting letting 17 and 18 year old in," said Harry Hoppes in Hoppes Pub.

In the first days of spring Courtney Hoppes and Bret Funko seem to have forgotten about classes for the day.
Gault streaks its way to second place

The Gault Hall Streaking Team has just returned from a second place finish at the National Streaking Competition in Daytona, Fla., where they beat approximately 30 other teams before losing to the University of Florida.

The Gault Streakers are probably best known around UI for their semi-annual jaunts around (and through the dorms and Greek houses.

The judges told us the UI team had the best lines and no tale.

-- Dick Galick, Gault captain

"I don't think that we were that fair, because we didn't have any lines other," added "come to think of it, we didn't have any lines.

It was reported that the glare from the Gault Streakers' white bodies was so bright that researchers are looking into ways of harnessing the reflected sunlight into usable energy.

The sun of Dayton wasn't without its disadvantages, however. said Galick. "One team member got so burnt that they didn't have to go to the competition...well, he was pretty sunburned."

Overall, Galick was pleased with their first performance at the competition.

"We were ready to check with some much bigger schools, and we came out on top," he said.

"We were able to participate in the competition because we recently joined the Society of Streakers," Galick said. He said that membership in the society enticed them to many benefactors.

"We even got membership bracelets," he said, adding "they couldn't give us membership cards because there just isn't anywhere we could put them." Galick said that the judges gave pages using five different judging criteria. The criteria were style, technique, originality, general performance and size. Teams with See Streakers, page 11

Ul sheep tender produces wool

A young man from southern Idaho, having graduated from UI, set out to seek employment. After much footwork, the lad at last landed a good position as a sheep tender on one of the larger local ranches.

During the period of technical job training, he was instructed on how to shear and crop a sheep that had been pointed out earlier.

The youth remained at dinner time proudly displaying not the fleece, but the entire skin of the animal. The foreman was enraged with such stupidity. He gave the boy a sharp blow across his face, by which he was misused fellow fell into the cook fire.

The youth was severely burned over much of his body, but the quick-thinking foreman tore off the boy's smoking clothes and wrapped them in the fresh sheep skin. By the time they could get him to the local medical 20 hours later, the sheep hide had remarkably graced to the youth's crispy surface. The boy recovered fast and resumed work on the sheep ranch.

Now, as well as being a useful sheep tender, he yields his employer two bushels of wool each year.

Campuses bust MS; MTV prize

Students Against Multiple Sclerosis is launching a national recruitment campaign for top leaders of 250 campus chapters of which will be the site of an MTV concert.

The National MS Society will select a top student to chair the campaign and lead other students in conducting MS education and awareness fundraising events.

The position allows students to lead a major campus-wide event, gain practical business experience and further management and leadership skills. Internship credit for this position can be obtained.

Students who have demonstrated leadership skills and are interested in the position can call Students Against MS in New York at 1-800-4 BUST MS for information.

Both collegiate and high school students are uniting to "just MS," a disabling neurological disease that most often strikes young adults between 18 and 34. Each week brings more than 200 new cases of MS are diagnosed and there is no known cause or cure.

The campus that raises the most money for Students Against Multiple Sclerosis will be the site of a 1987 concert to be broadcast on a cable music video channel that reaches more than 27.8 million households.

President Gibb: Could he be Herb?

Ever wanted to meet Herb, the guy who finally tried the Whopper? Larry Burger of Moscow did.

Burger, who was eating last week at the Burger King located on the Troy Highway four miles east of Moscow spotted the unsuspecting man who is traveling the country and visiting one Burger King in each state.

The Burger King Corporation started the publicity campaign last December and is giving $1,000 to the first person to spot Herb in a Burger King. Lift his arm and yell out “I found Herb.”

Burger did just that and will receive a cashier’s check for $1,000 sometime this month.

Burger will also undergo an extensive publicity tour of the Northwest and get his picture taken with Herb many times.

“He didn’t seem like a nice guy. I didn’t get to talk with him that long,” Burger said. “Guess he’s a pretty busy guy.”

Herb said in a telephone interview that he apologized to Burger for making such a last exit. “I stayed and had a Whopper with him but I’m on a tight schedule. I had to be in Bozeman the next day,” he said.

The spokesperson for Burger King’s publicity campaign said he would not reveal much about Herb’s identity because “it would ruin the fun for others.” He added, “We’re trying not to let too many pictures of Herb out. Just enough exposure to keep it interesting.”

But those who have spotted him in other parts of the country describe him as an unethetic, humble, upper-toush, middle-aged bald-headed man.

Carol Smith, of New York, who spotted Herb in an Albany Burger King said, “He has a little trouble coordinating his clothes. Looks for striped shirts, a striped tie, polyester brown pants that are too short, black socks, and brown 1930 shoes. If you find those things, he’ll probably be the guy in them.”

Bob George of Nevada, who spotted the vision of fashion in a Las Vegas Burger King said, “I remember hearing this sort of nasally, grave voice ordering a Whopper and I turned around in amazement and it was Herb.”

Burger King is wrapping up the advertising campaign soon, according to spokesperson, and Herb will only visit 10 more Burger King restaurants.

Herb said he’s had fun on the tour and is very happy he finally broke down and tried a Whopper. “They really are good,” he said. But Herb said he is getting tired and all those Whoppers are “beginning to show.”

Sprague receives faculty honor

The director of the Alfred Bowers Laboratory of Anthropology has been named recipient of the sixth annual Faculty Award from the University Library.

Rodrick Sprague, professor of anthropology, will receive the award in ceremonies April 8, beginning at 3:00 p.m., in the library conference room, to which the public is invited.

The honor is bestowed during National Library Week on a UI faculty member who consistently contributes to the operation and development of the library.

Sprague has been on several library committees and was instrumental in securing several thousand books on anthropology for the facility. He has donated many books himself, and has served as liaison between his department and the UI library in collection development for more than 15 years.

Sprague joined the UI faculty in 1967 and became director of the Alfred Bowers Laboratory of Anthropology in December 1980. Before coming to the UI, he was staff archaeologist at Washington State University, where he earned his bachelor’s and master’s degrees in anthropology. His doctorate in that discipline is from the University of Arizona.
Another job for J eb

David Blakely

Columnist

There comes a time in our lives when we have to take stock of ourselves, and reevaluate the life we are living. This past weekend was one of those times.

I had gone to the Best Western lounge on Friday night, as is my usual habit, to have a few drinks and check out the female crowd.

In spite of two or three trips a week to this bar, I had never considered myself a chronic "Lounge Lizard." Yet the occasional sale I enjoyed here stirred my curf new fancies and my tastes became increasingly feminine.

It was during a brief soiree to the men's room that I happened to perch myself next to Brother Jeb. It was his last night in Moscow and I berated him, as many of you have done for his views. At Point that he challenged me to give him 30 minutes of my time.

There was a crowd at the bar out of curiosity. I accepted his challenge. We were there, in that very bathroom, that I was saved.

As Brother Jeb said to me: "Who has time to drink when the Lord through beautiful music or when all that men want to do is hunt pongoart. The problem with men today can be summed up in three words: SEX, SEX, SEX."

Of course our lack of culture is not entirely women's fault. After all, it was men who allowed them out of the house and gave them the notion that they are our equals.

So we're partly to blame. We let Pandora out of her box. Well then, what can we do to restore our culture and free our minds from this preoccupation with sex?

First, we need to convince the ladies that the Women's Liberation movement is supposed to work on the devil. In other words, they need to be liberated from liberation.

All women know that true happiness is keeping their husband happy and free from the burden of guilt. They're, after all, the sex they're doing.

For those poor souls not yet married I suggest modest dress and regular church attendance. Therefore I ask ye to reconsider Brother Jeb's message as I have done. The Lord has spoken to me; he can speak to you too.

He who has ears to hear, let him hear.

LETTERS POLICY: The Idaho Argonaut will accept Letters to the editor until noon on the day of publication. They should be limited to one page in length, typed, and double-spaced. For subjects requiring greater exposition, arrangements may be made with the editor. Letters must be signed in ink, and include the name, address, and phone number of the writer. Names of writers may be edited for mechanical and spelling errors. The Idaho Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to publish any letter.
Riddle Me This

vulnerability and absolute control. It's a helluva temptation. Unfortunately, not to make a friend of this ambition can be to entertain some pretty unruly consequences. That's where the elephant comes in.
People are as possessive, as territorial as any animal. Humans will reach out for something better, and when gotten it pick the easiest method for keeping it by pushing others back. We're so afraid of losing something. We forget the cooperative and that there's nothing worth for unless the powers that make one man one nation strong entertain room for us all.
Power used to inspire great deeds for social advancement or technical evolution has a positive role.
But all through history, men have applied it with blood and destruction, and with the poisons and wastes of their greed. Things get out-of-hand. It's damn hard to know when. And it packs one mean hangover that affects everyone.
Power is a kind of energy that's always in flux;
that's how its stability is maintained — by shifting its focus and surges. It's a six-ton elephant balancing on a big rubber ball in the middle of a three-ring circus at a neat trick.
But when it's not kept within perspective, it becomes a nasty problem. Governments are notoriously the shirkers of powers. They're seldom democratically with their powers since they're afraid a bigger elephant will crowd them out. What they grossly overlook is that when they've control-ned an elephant too big, they can't prop it under a rubber ball.
For example, there's no logic to mustering a nuclear arsenal which won't be used; it is a dangerous and only given birth to the likelihood of actual deployment. A weapon is no threat if everyone knows you'd never activate it. It's built on a dare and a gamble that you will if pushed hard enough. It must be a reatility.
And a six-megaton elephant is going to spill over into everyone's problems.
Governments can't play this riddle anymore: guess where my missiles are or if I'll strike first or whether I'll fire across the line at 12 or 40 miles. In this nuclear age, we've taken the guesswork out of war in terms of consequences. It's become too powerful and too easy for everyone to resist indecisively.
I don't think Reagan or the soviets or Khadafy or the United Nations or any political power is wise enough to figure out the circus we've gotten ourselves into. They're drunk on Power. Somehow, we have to get the message across that their white elephants aren't welcome. And that peace is a non-lethal, flexible rubber ball. Sometime soon, we've really got to start making better friends.
1987 ASUI budget passed with some opposition

By Eric Fanning
Staff writer

Working with about $150,000, ASUI senators passed the budget for fiscal year '87 during a special meeting Saturday. The main debate over the budget centered on a car purchase, irregular help cutbacks, and a salary cap for senators.

The car purchase, under the General Administration budget, would involve buying a new ASUI van that could be used by Outdoor Rentals, the Argonaut for circulation, and the ASUI senate. The $12,000 purchase would replace the '71 van the ASUI is currently using that "is ready to die," Sen. Cheryl Sabala, senate finance committee chairperson, said.

Opposition came from Sen. Paul AllLee who said it was unclear what the purpose of the van was. AllLee said a statement of intent should be amended in the car purchase stating exactly what the car would be used for. President Gino White said the biggest thing he did not like about the whole ASUI budget was the car purchase. He said there was a need for a statement of intent concerning the car before it was bought.

An amendment proposed by Sen. Reagan Davis putting the $15,000 for the car (depreciation added in) into a dedicated fund to be used for only the car and to be decided on at a later date was passed.

But the car was decided on before the meeting where when the $15,000 was voted back into the General Administration budget with only Sen. John Rauh and AllLee voting against it. Rauch said there was a better time to buy the car than now. AllLee said he didn't want to debate the car purchase until more research was done. Sabala said the purchase had been researched and would be less expensive than renting a vehicle.

The budget also cuts back money going to KUOI said the Argonaut for irregular help. The KUOI cuts include stating that the endowment would be cut from $8150-125 and cutting the news director position from the budget.

Andrew Davie, music director for KUOI, said KUOI was a little disappointed by the cuts, but there was not much they could do. He said KUOI has the largest record library in the North West and a good reputation across the nation. He said the station would like to keep improving, but he said the station understands that "times are hard now."

Argonaut cuts include editor from $170-$150 and news editor from $100-$85. Three new positions, legislative correspondent, paste-up coordinator and paste-up crew, were eliminated from the budget. Discussion also centered around cutting another new position, associate editor.

Sabala said several new positions had already been cut and that was enough. Davis said it would be an injustice to the Argonaut to cut another position.

Pay increases will be seen at the Golf Course at an overall increase of five percent. The actual increases in salary for employees were: the first employee salaries 15 percent and the second employee salaries 2.5 percent.

The senate would also have a pay raise from $57.50-$80. Davis said it had been three years since senators had a salary increase. She said other ASUI departments had pay increases almost every year.

Rauh said money should be no object for the senate. He said the senators should be in the office to help students.

Davis said she had spent about forty hours in the office this past week working with the budget. Sen. Richard Burke said he felt $550 was an adequate compensation for the job.

It was also questioned whether the senate should fund the Students Bar Association (SBA) $1,250 for next year. Sen. David Dose said that the SBA had broken an agreement last year by supporting a candidate that was running for ASUI office. Sen. Brian Long said if the senate "nuked every department for breaking rules and regulations there would be no ASUI." Burke said he did not think they deserved $2,500 from the ASUI for the minimum amount of activity they have. An extra $1,000 was budgeted to the SBA through the General Administration budget.

The entire ASUI budget was passed by the senate with only Rauh and AllLee voting against it. AllLee said he could not vote yes on the entire budget because he was not comfortable with the car purchase. There was a rumor that White would veto the budget because of the money being allocated for the vehicle purchase.

New additions to the ASUI budget are also allowing the senate to plan for the future. Sabala told the Argonaut on Thursday. She said through an increase in budgeting for depreciation, the senate is planning for future equipment purchases in each department.

The senate had also been speaking, although not officially, of adding an endowment to this years budget if the General Reserve had been high enough. The General Reserve is about $29,000 for next year. However, Sen. Paula Evans found the suggestion would not have been "financially stable" this year.
Track individuals shine at WSU

By Chris Schulte
Staff writer.

Despite a 118-29 loss to the Lady Cougars of Washington State University the Lady Vandal track team enjoyed numerous top individual performances in the meet this weekend at WSU.

Leading the way for the Vandals was senior Sherry Schoenborn, who won the javelin with a toss of 178-2. The throw not only gave the senior a victory, but it earned her a trip to the NCAA Championships in early June. Schoenborn easily bettered the qualifying standard of 170 feet and also earned herself a personal and school record.

Other victories in the dual meet competition were turned in by Sophomore Bobby Purdi and freshman Cathy Wall. Purdi collected her win in the 100 meter High-Hurdles in a time of 14.7 while Wall was victorious in the 5000 meter run in 10:03.

Coach Scott Lorek was pleased with his teams performance despite the lopsided score as he said afterwards. "Everyone we had in the meet competed well and I'm pleased with that, it's just impossible to compete with the depth that WSU has."

The mens team had better success in Walla Walla at the Whitman Invitational as the Vandals came home with five first places and numerous other top finishes.

The top performer of the day was Patrick Williams who collected wins in the 100-meter and 200-meter with times of 10.8 and 21.0. Other first places were turned in by Nicolas Tracey (400-meter, 49.0), Dan Martin (shot put, 53-6 1/2) and Jeff Collins (long jump, 22-10).

The rest of the top placers were Kurt Schmeltzer (second, discus), John Mittman (fourth, discus) and John Fahey (third, 400-meter hurdles).

Men's Coach Mike Keller said after the meet, "Nothing all that spectacular from the performance standpoint in the meet, but it should be a good tune-up for the All-Idaho meet this coming weekend."

The Vandal team was delivered a bad blow during the meet when Nicolas Tracey, after winning the 400, injured a leg during the 200-meter race. Keller said, "That could wind up hurting us. We're hoping that it might only be a cramp, but he's lost for sure at the All-Idaho meet." "This meet was Tracey's first after being sidelined the last 1 1/2 months with a similar injury."

Both the mens and womens' teams will be in Boise Friday and Saturday for the All-Idaho Championships.

Floyd finds fantastic Filer phenom

By Kathy McCanlies
Sports Editor

Tim Floyd, the US's newly named head basketball coach, didn't waste any time in reaching one of his coaching objectives by recruiting Idaho's top athlete last week. In under a week, Bill Shill, a little known farm kid from Filer, was recruited and signed for a four-year contract with the UI basketball program. Floyd was ecstatic during the press conference announcing his "best find in years," he said.

"Bill has the potential to develop into one of the top basketball players in the West, possibly in the nation," Coach Floyd said of the 6-foot-6 forward from the southern Idaho farming community of 65. "I can thank my lucky stars that we convinced Bill to leave his family's farm and enroll in school."

Floyd said that Shill is something coach's dreams are made of. He led his four-man basketball team to three straight state titles. A four-person team is allowed when a high school cannot field a regular squad. The fourth title was denied to the Filer Bulls only because the team's transportation, a 68 Ford station wagon, broke down on the way to the state tournament at Athol.

Shill averaged 30 points and 14 rebounds his senior year and tallied a total of 2,020 points during his four-year career at Filer High, a record for any Idaho school.

Shill didn't play for a larger high school in Twin Falls because he didn't have the transportation needed to travel the 20 miles, except for his horse Charlie. Therefore, he didn't get the exposure needed to be recruited by any colleges. How then, did the UI find Shill?

Credit a side trip to Jackpot, Nevada, by newly named assistant coach Larry Eustachy. Eustachy stopped for directions when he missed a turnoff at Highway 99 near Filer and saw Shill repeatedly dunk a basketball into his family's apple basket which served as a basketball hoop. When he found his bearings, Eustachy asked to use the Shill phone, and called the UI head coach about this "amazing kid that had springs for feet," Floyd said.

"It was purely an accident that Larry found Bill," said Floyd, adding, "I mean, how many Division I coaches cruise through the countryside looking for recruits...and find an amazingly talented one?"

Floyd said that he was skeptical when Eustachy told him about a farm kid that had the potential of Bill Walton, a former UCLA great who now plays for the Boston Celtics. "But when I saw some videos that his grandmother took of his final home game at Filer High, I began to wonder what his mother fed him when he grew up. It must have been some kind of Wonderbread," said Floyd.

Shill said in a telephone interview that hard farm work and jumping to knock down swallows nests were the reasons he developed his physique, but the secret of his strength came from his mother's alfalfa muffins she made each day. "They didn't taste too hot," Shill said. "But she kept telling me that they'd make me strong. I guess I paid off."

Shill reportedly has the school's bench press record of 300 pounds and set an unofficial state record in the high jump with a seven foot mark.

The high jump was ruled unofficial because Shill wore hiking boots, an illegal athletic shoe for state meets.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Shill, Bill plans to major in Aeronautical Engineering when he enrolls next fall. He garnered a 1.9 grade point average in high school.

It was no April Fools, the Romantics were in it for the Pullman Saturday night, and you missed it.

As expected this ideal party band had no fear of a first class concert in every way except sound quality.

That was because the concert was held in the ballroom of the WSU Compton (student) Union Building, so the acoustics were excellent.

The door was open at 11 p.m. and the band hit the stage at 11:30. With CFPS extending the class closing time, you could have been dining in the new Taylor Hall at 11:30.

``What I Like About You'' had to be earned as it was played by the band as an encore, only after everyone was up and dancing.

The turn out was small, perhaps no more than 400, but did not daunt either Wide or the opening act, or the Romantics.

The versions of ``Rock You Up,'' ``Talking in Your Sleep,'' ``What I Like About You'' were all extended.

Within two songs the crowd was bopping to ``One in a Million,'' and other known favorites such as ``Rock You Up,'' and the opening act, or the Romantics.

The title cut itself was not that impressive but some other cuts that we hope will soon be released showed how this band's continuing ability to mix super dimensional music with modern, cliched, romantic lyrics.

``Talking City, Last Night,'' was one song most familiar to the Moscow-Pullman area was ``New Romance'' which was dropped from 2-Fun playlist weeks ago.

Widow started off the evening playing what they hope is up and coming rock'n roll. The one song most familiar to the Moscow-Pullman area was ``New Romance'' which was dropped from 2-Fun playlist weeks ago.

The first stop was made at the University's Colton Hall with the crowd gathered in the front row.

only three or four members didn't receive as many points as a group the size of Gaul. For example, a team with 45 members.

As a result of the competition between schools was carried over on the competition, and Gaul won that hands down, said Fallick. He said that the team drank more alcohol than the second and third teams combined. Fallick admitted having a strange feeling of satisfaction derived schools like Harvard and U.S. The Harvard guys were so prim and proper: they didn't allow for any spontaneity in their routines," he said.

He cited a five-minute acrobatic solo during Gaul's performance performed by Elyk. "The Great Fost was just the kind of the spontaneous thing that excited the crowd, and that's what the judges like.

"He was really something," said Fallick.

Fallick said that will be ready to take the title next year. "There's great enthusiasm in the crew," he said. "We're already starting to get new recruits."

Fallick said he wishes the streaking team got more media coverage, arguing that it is a spectaclesport that is very popular, and that they usually get a large crowd to watch. "At least until the police come," he said.

Governor of North Idaho to speak in Moscow

Diamond Jeffry Western, Governor of the "State of" North Idaho, will deliver the state of the state address today, the first Tuesday in April as mandated by "state" law.

"The governor, who will be speaking at the Moscow Community Center, said he will be addressing the issues facing the State of North Idaho today such as education and the weather. In addition he will discuss some of the issues raised by "our neighbors to the south" including terrorism, homophobia and the lottery.

"The 'South Idaho' Legislature certainly has supplied us with plenty of fodder," Western said. "Their actions cry out for comment. Our main thrust, however, will be the positive aspects of the State of Idaho."

He added that the address would be of interest to all residents of North Idaho.

Included in the event will be performances by Belinda Bowler of Hope, North Idaho, and the Bonnet Dollar Band from the Moscow area.

Western said, "It is purely coincidental the first Tuesday in April falls on April 2. We are for real. This is no joke."

North Idaho: A land of peace and tranquility

Editor's note: The following is an advanced copy of the Honorable Governor Jon J. Wimmer's State of the State Address, which he will deliver today at the Moscow Community Center.

Friends and fellow Idahoans, we are here tonight to discuss the state of our state. What is the condition of the State of North Idaho? First, we must ask, what is the State of North Idaho?

The State of North Idaho is a grassy meadow of regional pride and awareness. We are regional citizens. We live here in North Idaho and we are proud of it.

The State of North Idaho is not another layer of bureaucracy and red tape. We are not replacing the bozos in Boise with our own hometown versions.

The State of North Idaho is a state of mind. We go where our minds lead us. We live in our own little corner of the world. We are at peace with ourselves.

The State of North Idaho is not a political or religious dogma, or a new simplistic version of reality to be forced upon us. We are not a herd of round pegs to be forced into a series of square holes. Sure, we might fit but we wouldn't like it.

The State of North Idaho is a business run like a government. We are in the business of promotion, pronouncing North Idaho people and North Idaho products, keeping our dollars circulating here.

The State of North Idaho is not a government run like a business. We are not here just to make a buck, although that might be kind of nice. All money raised goes into the State of North Idaho coffers to be used to finance our future campaigns and retire debts from past ones.

But most importantly, the State of North Idaho is real. You know that, and I know that. For those who don't know that, it is our duty to enlighten them.

In that regard, I would like to read you the report submitted by our ambassador to South Idaho, David Leroy.

"Dear Gov: My report. The south remains geographically isolated. My efforts to enlighten the populace from my current post have been only moderately successful. Thus I am planning a full scale educational coup to put the government in northern hands beginning January 1987."

Thank you, Ambassador Leroy, for your efforts on behalf of the State of North Idaho.

As for the condition of the State of North Idaho, we are here, we are healthy and we are happy. It's a shame we can't say that about our neighbors to the south.

They are making us the laughing stock of the nation, the Mississippi of the Northwest, almost bankrupt economically and spiritually.

Instead of building education they impede it. For example, South Idaho's Preston dethroned Mr. Fire and Brimstone himself, tried to force our public schools to teach coca- tionism. And not. I might add, the way the Neo-Peace or the majority of the world population view creation. But rather only his own fundamentalist perspective. I ask you, is this representative of North Idaho thinking?

Or Gene Winchester: Talk about a half-cooked son of a gun. He is so afraid of gay people that he wanted to forbid teachers from even discussing homosexuality. He called two Republican legislators "over lovers" for questioning the wisdom of such a foolish and unnecessary law. I ask you, is that representative of North Idaho thinking?

Now let's go to the top of the list. Sen. Steve Syms. He is the one you might recall, who described North Idaho as being filled with long-haired food stamp recipients who love tuna fish. He might have been right on one account.

More recently, he was the lone eagle, the only senator to stand up for our right to keep and bear armor piercing bullets.

Now, I ask you, is that representative of North Idaho thinking, or any rational thought for that matter? Now you may think I'm peculiar. That may be, but just look at the people you are surrounding yourself for. That matter. We are all a little peculiar and proud of it. That is our strength, as well as our North Idaho State motto: "De Libertas Quidas. (Free to be Peculiar.)

Yes, we in North Idaho are peculiar, but we are quite sane. On the other hand, our neighbors to the south are crazy. Now we may have a few crazies up here, but at least ours are not in power.

As much as that sounds absurd or humorous, there is a serious threat here. A rising tide of fundamentalist fanaticism is attempting to down our individuality, our North Idaho way of life. And riding the crest of the wave is a crew would be South Idaho ayatollahs.

But there is hope. There may be more people in South Idaho than here, but we have always gone for quality, not quantity. And as we become more aware of our strengths, take pride in our uniqueness, and refuse to submit to imposed dogmas, we can preserve our way of life. They cannot defeat a united North Idaho.

So here we are. This is our first state of the state address, the beginning of a movement, an expression of our regional consciousness, a commitment to celebrate North Idaho people and products.

This is only our first such celebration, it will not be our last.

Staffer strikes over budget

By C. W. Hugg
Staff writer

Larry Richardson, Idaho Argonaut Staff Writer, called in a hunger strike shortly after hearing that the ASUI Senate did not budget for his position for the 1986-87 school year.

ASUI senators cast their final vote Saturday morning ignoring the need for an editorial position coordinator. Richardson received the shocking news shortly upon awakening late Saturday afternoon.

Richardson awoke to concerted grumblings from his dormitory residents and screamed out from under his covers. "What's all the noise about?"

Richardson swore that he will eat no cafeteria food until the Senate reconvenes. "Maybe this is a blessing in disguise," Richardson said.
