UI students receive 10-day jail sentence

Four University of Idaho students, who were sentenced Thursday for the Aug. 27 theft of four mountain bikes from a student dormitory at Washington State University. Reed Smith, Marvin Washington, Richard Carey and Steve Nolan, all members of the UI football team, were sentenced to four years in jail, but District Court Judge David Frazier suspended all but 10 days of the sentence. In addition, the students were put on probation for two years and ordered to complete 25 hours of community service. The maximum penalty for the offense was four years in jail and $20,000 in fines. While Kitsap County senior deputy prosecutor Ron Shirley had asked for a 30-day sentence but said Judge Frazier felt the students "had already been through quite a bit.

"The judge indicated that in these cases, he usually does give 30 days, but limited it because of all they had been through already — ridiculous at some point, losses of opportunities and the possibility that these charges will affect their futures," Shirley told the Spokane Spokesman-Review.

The four will serve their sentences at the discretion of Kitsap County probation officer Cheryl Haas. The sentence must be served before May 1, 1989 and the men will be required to spend at least two consecutive days in jail.

Dukakis wins debate in student poll

Michael Dukakis was the overall winner of Sunday's presidential debate according to a University of Idaho student poll. There was a part of a program entitled, "The 1988 Presidential Debate: A Cross Cultural Look," it was sponsored by the UI International Trade and Development Office and the UI Political Science Department. According to Gleanne Wray, program director for ITAD, 54 people took part in the program. The participants viewed the debate on television and then voted at the end. The participants consisted of eight high school students, 14 inter- national students and 22 regular college students.

The Slug County prisoners, which was set up to do, "Wray said. "We wanted to provide international students with a better understanding of the American political process while also showing how their perceptions differ.

Peace Corps wants graduates

The Peace Corps is seeking graduating seniors who are interested in serving in the Peace Corps.

UI TKEs are tops in awards

By Len Anderson
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon won five awards this summer from their national headquarters, including four plaques and one certificate. Out of 300 chapters and colonies nationwide, only eight percent receive awards. Alpha Delta Teke won more awards than any other chapter, including a scholarship award, a most improved award, an alumni relations award, a public relations award, and a certificate for outstanding alumni support.

Three chapters of TKE received the scholarship recognition of achievement. It was centered upon different programs of the chapter. Alpha Delta Teke's programs included a scholarship enrichment program and a high school scholarship award program.

"Scholarship is more than good grades," UI TKE president Paul Thuesen said.

Study looks at art in economy

The first comprehensive assessment how arts organizations affect Idaho's economy will be undertaken by the University of Idaho.

To be conducted by the UI Center for Business Development and Research, the study is being funded by a $6,400 grant from the Northwest Area Foundation of St. Paul, Minn. Under the direction of Larry Merk, CEDR director, and Michael Diolofo, professor of economics, the study will produce an inventory of non-profit arts organizations in Idaho. It will also determine the demographic, socio-economic and other characteristics of those attending arts events and how much they spend doing so.

Merk said that on a statewide basis, the study will estimate the primary and secondary economic impact of arts in Idaho in terms of expenditures, employment, income and taxes.

On a local basis, the study will outline the economic impact of the arts in three Idaho communities where the arts have been important to economic development. Those communities will be selected later this year.

Merk said the results of the study should be particularly useful to statewide arts groups.

Tions According to the abortion regulations written by Bruce Padgett, Iowa has only legal up to the second trimester, unless the abortion is necessary to preserve the life of the woman or the fetus.

The alcoholic beverage regulations written by Anne Coaso states that any person born after April 10, 1968 entering an establishment licensed to sell alcoholic beverages is committing a misdemeanor.

Iowans' moral laws are probably not well-known to students. One law, involving the crime of "seized cohabitation", is violated when persons not married to each other live together in a sexual relationship. This is punishable by not more than a $300 fine and/or six months imprisonment.

Also discussed are landlord-tenant relations, bicycle, shoplifting and drug laws. Information on residency requirements and tax and marriage issues is also offered.

In addition to legal issues, the booklet also contains a student's residence hall constitution and a model disciplinary board constitution, which is meant to serve as guides for the residence halls when they revise or reconstruct their own constitutions.

The above-mentioned areas refer only to Idaho laws. Out-of- state students who might want to know about such things as the grandfather clause, the hitchhiking law enforcement, or marriage fees should contact the ASUI office of the attorney general for a copy of The Law and You.

Some countries ask for a large number of highly trained scientists and we have to tell them that the Peace Corp isn't the right group to talk to for that type of assistance" Haugen said.

However, even in those cases, the Peace Corps tries to fill as complete a position as possible and works with the host country to determine the areas most urgent needs, he said.

"With common occurrence, Haugen said, is for a group of volunteers to arrive in a country to help with, for example, English language training, as requested by the host government, or to solve more urgent problems like the need for an adequate sanitation system or agricultural assistance.

"But we have people there to help with the more important problems." He said.

Drug penalties explored

By Sherry Deal Staff Writer

The penalties are stiff if you get caught in the drug scene. This seemed to be the message stressed at a panel discussion entitled "Drugs: Arrest and Conviction," held Tuesday night in the SUB Borah Theatre.

The discussion was between a convicted drug dealer, his defense attorney, and the prosecuting attorney. The turnout for the event was relatively small, approximately 15 people attended.

Bill Mabbutt, a Moscow business man and a convicted drug dealer, expressed his regret for his involvement with drugs. "Whatever you do, don't get involved with drugs," he said. It's not worth it," Mabbutt said.

Mabbutt was arrested last spring, but did not receive his sentencing until August. He was charged with a $5,000 fine and placed on probation, but did not have to go to jail. According to William Thompson, Mabbutt was a lucky man. If a person is convicted of "delivery of a controlled substance," which can be as simple as handing drugs to a friend, 95 percent of the time the person will go to jail.

Thompson said Mabbutt was not sentenced to a prison term because he was honest with the police, was a well known member of the community and had no previous record.

Craig Osborne, the prosecuting attorney, stressed that penalties concerning drug arrests are severe.

Law school to hear 15 court appeals

The Idaho Court of Appeals will hear arguments on 15 appeals at the College of Law on the University of Idaho campus during the last week of September.

The court is scheduled to hear arguments during hearings Monday through Friday. The appeals arise from Kootenai, Benewah, Shoshone, Bonner, Clearwater, Idaho and Nez Perce counties, including the case of Juan Sanchez, who shot and wounded Lois J. Shread in June 1987 while he attempted to rob an Express Mart in Lewiston.

Second District Judge John B. Bengtson of Moscow sentenced Sanchez to 30 years in prison on charges of aggravated battery and attempted robbery. Sanchez contends his sentence is excessive. His appeal will be heard at 10:30 a.m. Friday.

Other cases will be heard between Sept. 26-30.

In another Nez Perce County appeal, a Nez Perce Indian protests that state courts have no jurisdiction over him because he is a Native American. Leonard Marek was convicted by a jury of aggravated battery and a felony charge of injury to children, arising from abuse of his two-month-old daughter. Marek was sentenced to a fixed 15-year prison term.

The Idaho Supreme Court reversed the battery conviction on grounds that the federal government has sole jurisdiction over Marek under the Major Crimes Act because he is a tribal member.

The high court upheld the abuse of children charge, however, and sent the case back to Second District Court in Nez Perce for sentencing. Marek was then sentenced to a 10-year fixed term.

Marek is now appealing to the court of appeals. He argued that the sentence was excessive and that the state courts still have no jurisdiction over him.

His appeal will be heard at 2 p.m. Wednesday.

Potato wrapper wins awards and money

By Pete Johnson Staff Writer

News editor's note: This story originally appeared in last Friday's issue. Unfortunately, an entire section of the story didn't appear because it was cut off. We apologize for this accident and present the story here in its entirety.

Researchers at the University of Idaho received first place at the Potato Association of America Graduate Student Competition which was held July 23 of this year at Ft. Collins, Colo.

Kiran Shetty, a graduate student at the UI and Robert Dwelle, the division chairman from the UI Plant Science Department have been working together for the last four years to invent a new method of potato packaging. They succeeded in developing a method by which they can wrap potatoes individually.

A film is used to wrap the potatoes, then it is shrunk to fit the potatoes. The films are specially selected to slow respiration and hold moisture. This makes it possible to print on the potato such logos as "Grown in Idaho" or "Genuine Idaho Potato."

Some advantages of this breakthrough is that the shelf life of the potato is increased anywhere from six to eight weeks and it is better able to contain vitamins and nutrients. These will both be beneficial when potatoes are shipped to the East Coast to be sold. It will also be a boost to the economy because Idaho potatoes can now be earmarked as genuine, and won't be mixed in with crop from other states.

Shetty said in a interview on Sept. 19 that "people are willing to pay more for the extended shelf life, as well as for the famous juicy potato."

In large cities, single potatoes will be sold at a cost of 25 to 30 cents each. Locally and in nearby states, they will be marketed in sacks of varying size. The cost of wrapping comes to approximately three or four cents each.

Shetty also said that the invention will be a great marketing tool because "for the first time, we have been using the shrinking wrap method."
Legalizing Drugs: learning from mistakes

By Todd Harper

Let's face it, the so-called "war on drugs" and the national hysteria surrounding it are just a plan to spend more time, money and effort. The program has proven itself to be ineffective and yet many Americans stubbornly cling to the notion that enforcement of anti-drug legislation is the solution to America's perceived drug problem. Quite simply, the federal government can neither allocate nor acquire the resources needed to win this "war." The net result of this ideology has been the creation of violent drug gangs, overcrowding in our jails, added official corruption and the totally obscene waste of billions of tax dollars. Add to this the fact that this "war" benefits the very organization it is intended to hurt. Organized crime has a vested interest in keeping illegal drugs illegal. By keeping its price low and prices astronomically high, organized crime gains billions of dollars in profit from the sale of "illicit" drugs every year while laughing at the government's attempts to keep illegal drugs out of the country.

Most of the proponents of this foolishness are pesky conservatives. Brainwashed by a biased media and duped by government distortion, these champions of illegal drugs are not as potentially harmful or addictive as drugs like tobacco, alcohol or illegal drugs. While any ex-smoker or alcoholic will point out that such reasoning is completely fallacious, the surgeon general drove the point home by issuing a statement to the effect that legal drugs are every bit as addictive and harmful as illegal drugs. Indeed, the terms "smoker" and "alcoholic" are merely nice ways of saying "drug addict." Nevertheless, the pernicious attitude among legal drug users (liberal and conservative) is that "if it's legal, it must be OK." Unfortunately, the legality of these drugs is often used as a basis for their morality. Both issues of morality in this country, the war on drugs illustrates America's predilection for hypocrisy and irrationality. As usual, a few facts point out the folly of conservative foolishness and shed light on the wholesome behavior actually existing in America. In 1986, alcohol (a drug) was involved in 50 percent of all traffic fatalities, half of the homicides involving firearms and played a prominent role in incidents of family violence. Yet, it is legally attainable, assuming of course one has reached the legal age for consumption (we all know how well that law works). Cigarettes are known to cause lung cancer, heart disease, birth defects and a myriad of other ailments and diseases and yet there are 48 million Americans who willingly poison themselves and everyone else around them with nicotine (another drug) that can be legally bought by almost everyone and everywhere. Caffeine (contained in coffee, tea, chocolate, soft drinks, ad nauseum) causes anxiety, nervousness, sleep disorders and increases the heart rate yet millions of Americans can't start their day without that first cup of joe.

The total medical costs of alcohol and tobacco use are far greater than those associated with illegal drug abuse. Although the two terms are often used synonymously, it's important to understand that there is a significant difference between use and abuse — the former doesn't necessarily lead to the latter when it comes to illegal drugs. Federal studies estimate that 18 million Americans are alcohol abusers (compared with the 5 million Americans who abuse cocaine and heroin). Tobacco alone is responsible for some 400,000 deaths every year — while the death toll from ALL illegal drugs combined was only 5,600 in 1985. One might logically argue that these figures reflect the fact that fewer deaths result from illegal drugs because they are illegal and fewer people use them because of that reason. Once again, however, the stats speak for themselves and show that a larger percentage of legal drug users become abusers of other drugs than those who use illicit drugs — regardless of legality. Part of the problem lies in our attitudes. America simply refuses to admit that things like alcohol, caffeine and nicotine are drugs because they are and have always been a part of our culture — we grew up with these things. One can only guess at the foolishness at work in statements like "Drug AND Alcohol Counseling," or "Drug AND Alcohol Rehabilitation." Also, those organizations that are calling for a "drug-free" America don't seem to realize that even if illegal drugs are totally gone, the big three are still left (alcohol, caffeine and nicotine) and let's not forget the plethora of drugs that are prescribed for our every ache, groan and trea. The companies that push these drugs are very powerful and have well-paid lobbyists in the nation's capital. In light of this, it's easy to see that there never has been or never will there ever be a drug-free America.

All these facts have been bringing many people around to a line of thought that many of us have had for years — legalization of currently illegal drugs. Many people believe that legalization is motivated not only by libertarian ethic but also primarily by economic and logic. What possible sense does it make to continue pouring billions of dollars into the drug trade and still pretend that the money isn't needed. Sooner or later we'll have to face the fact that the way we've been doing things has bought us nothing but trouble. It would be a great (and long overdue) step in our evolution if we would take a beacon from the past and start learning from our mistakes.

Arg misses boat

Editor:
I was surprised when I picked up the papers Friday to find the story about University of Idaho football players Kirk Smith, Marvin Washington, Richard Carey and Steve Nolan winning the Argonaut’s coverage of the Washington State University game instead of the Idaho Argonaut.

Did you think the sentencing of four UI football players (and students) to 10 days in jail, 200 hours of community service and revoked scholarships would not be of interest to Idaho students? While I’m sure that potato wrappers and acronyms change at the LRC-TAC newsworthy events, I question the decision of an editor who would place these stories above legal action taken against four very viable members of the student body. It seems to me to be poor journalistic judgment to neglect or possibly suppress a story of this magnitude.

We’re already embarrassed at the altercation actions of these football players; we shouldn’t also have to be embarrassed about the carelessness of the school paper in reporting the story. I hate the thought of having to pick up the WRU paper to get UI campus news.

Food Service facts

Editor:
This is an open letter to any one who has ever eaten at the University of Idaho’s Wallace cafeteria, Satellite SUB, Joe’s Place or any of the Dome concessions.

As many of you are aware, the university has accepted bids from private contractors regarding the possibility of turning the food service operations over to a contractor. The bids were due Sept. 15.

Food service is simply that — a service to the university’s students, faculty, staff, and visitors. But, like many terms of any size, the UI food service has a few wrinkles that could be ironed out. Money, of course, is always an issue. The Wallace Cafeteria broke even in 1987. The Satellite SUB made a profit of $44,074. Joe’s Place lost $43,074. Food Service’s total “profit” was $3,896. (In an operation of this magnitude — $2.3 million a year — $4,000 can not be considered a profit — the system essentially broke even in 1987.)

This is one of the problem areas. One can branch losing $43,000, something needs to be done to correct the losses of at least that part of food service.

Another problem comes in the form of complaints from students and staff about the food at some special functions. Some of this is normal griping, but some of the complaints do merit attention. The current operation on campus has, at times, had problems with food not being served at the same time to large numbers of guests, food being cold when it reaches the customers, the food simply not tasting very good. This has not been true of all events, but it has occurred. Is it possible to get UI campus news without picking up the WRU paper?

Vandals turnover game to Montana

Offense explodes but loses game

By Joe Hughes
Sports Editor

The one reason the Idaho Vandals lost 26-17 to the Montana Grizzlies in Missoula, Mont., Saturday could be summed up in one word: turnovers. They proved to be a more important part of the game than either offensive, defense or special teams.

Idaho's record is now 2-1 and 0-1 in the Big Sky Conference. Montana boosted their record to 4-0 and 2-0 in conference play.

The Vandals compiled 605 yards of offense while the defense held the Grizzlies to 271 yards. Idaho also had 28 first downs compared to 13 by Montana. According to all the statistics, Idaho should have won the game, but the final statistic—the score—was not to the Vandals' favor.

In the first series of the game, Idaho started moving the ball downfield but quarterback John Huessta was tackled by Quinton in the end zone for a safety. The Grizzlies scored again on a 47-yard touchdown run by running back John Huessta to cap off a 60-yard drive with 5:54 left in the first quarter. Nick Dupe missed the extra point to make the score 13-0 at the end of the first quarter.

After a David Jackson touchdown reception of 19 yards from Priest and a Thay- ne Doyle 37-yard field goal, the Vandals closed to 13-10. Montana's Duce kicked a 39-yard field goal with 19 seconds left in the half for a 16-10 Montana halftime lead.

On the first play of the fourth quarter, Priest was intercepted in the end zone, but came back behind the running of Bruce Harris. The Vandals scored to take their only lead of the game on a 1-yard run by Harris 17-16.

With 3:39 left in the game, Montana's Duce kicked a 22-yard field goal that hit the left upright and wobbled over the crossbar to make the score 19-17.

The Vandals started a drive which appeared to be heading for the game-winning score. On a second down and six from the Montana 10, Priest's pass was deflected by Greg Nygren who raced 94-yards to put the nail in the Vandals' coffin.

Friesz finished the game.

NCAA reviews athletic department

By Sharon Bloomburg

The University of Idaho athletic department is in the process of being reviewed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association. According to Terri Riffe, assistant director of compliance services for the NCAA, the review is a service offered by the NCAA to universities as a tool to assessing the strengths and weaknesses of college athletic departments.

The service is officially known as a compliance review and involves meetings with executives, administrators, coaches and other people that are directly or indirectly involved with the athletic department at a college. The resulting information is given to the college. "We don't actually make a recommendation," Riffe said. "If the institu-

The University of Idaho Lady Vandals won their first Big Sky Conference volleyball match of the season Saturday night against Montana State in Bozeman.

Idaho diplomat with the Bobcats in three games, 17-15, 15-5 and 16-8 after falling Friday night to the Lady Grizzlies of the University of Montana in five games, 21-19, 15-11, 16-15 and 16-14.

Vandals' lone setback came with Montana State, but Idaho head coach Gary Lewis sees it as a learning experience for the future.

"The match was the Vernon of the Vandals' seven turnovers, three of them occurred in the game's crucial 12-yard line. Idaho's 14 possessions nine times the Vandals were in the Montana territory but they scored only three times.

Anyone tried to get into the weight room to lift on a weekend lately? I believe a Bible parable could be rephrased to fit the current situation: It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than a University of Idaho student to enter the weight room from seven to nine on a weekend.

It becomes excessively discouraging to try and raise a dumbbell over your head only to wipe out several others who have closed in around you trying to do their own exercises. Or how about waiting for what seems like hours before a bench is free behind a herd of gargantuan HE-MEN who could break you in half by just glancing at you?

It is painfully apparent that a new weight room facility is needed. Just ask any number of students who know all too well about spending an hour and a half in the weight room to get only a ten-minute workout.

But fret no longer, O woeful college student weightlifter. After years of debate, the UI is going to build another weight room. Yeah!

The new facility will be located in the basement of Memorial Gym according to UI Campus Rec-reation director Jim Karabetsos. The proposal to build a new weight room has been discussed since Karabetsos became director three years ago, but no one could decide where to put it. The administration may not operate at warp-speed, but it's nice to see something happening to remedy the situation.

No more pulled muscles from HE-MEN twisting arms to get to the front of the bench press line. No more waking up at 3:30 a.m. to beat the rush of weightlifters to the weight room. It's time to enjoy the goodness of lifting rather than the agony of tardy-packed movement in the weight room.

Shane Martinez and Shane Ristau defeated Shi- roda and Algrey of WSU in the men's doubles final.

In the mixed doubles final, David Scott and Jese- lina Dav-decied Karen Boell and Nancy Legson of WSU 6-1, 6-1.

Head coach Dave Scott said he is pleased with the way the team has played early this season. "We're looking really deep, both the men and the women," he said.

Scott is returning virtually the same women's team that played last year except for two new players. "As far as the upper part of my lad- der," he said, "they are all there."

"We don't have a real giant-killer," said Scott, "but we're really strong in all our positions."

"It's exciting to see such improvement in just one month," Scott said.

"They're a much more highly motivated team than they were at this time last year," said Scott.

The men's team plays against WSU in Pullman this Thursday and the women play WSU on Tues- day, Sept. 27.

A bizarre transformation
Moscow becomes weekend embassy for sci-fi convention

By Ali Peel
Staff Writer

Cavanaugh's in Moscow was an embassy to alternate worlds this weekend as it was the site of the MosCon X science fiction convention. But alternate worlds doesn't just mean such clothes as 'little green men in flying saucers' as it also includes such alternatives for the future as 'Avoiding Seated Writing,' and 'Antimatter Propulsion.' These topics and more were discussed at the annual convention.

Friday afternoon, local author M.J. Engh led a seminar designed, according to the show's program guide, 'to show even the hardest MCPs (Male Chauvinist Pigs) how to avoid sexism in their writing and still keep it lively.' Anti-matter propulsion may sound like nothing but science fiction. After all, it's what powered Star Trek's Enterprise on its five-year mission to the far ends of a galaxy of mediocre special effects. But Dr. Robert Forward discussed 20th century research into anti-matter, not its use in fiction.

Forward, who has been a senior scientist at Hughes Research Labs, gave a slide presentation and discussion about the current state of subatomic and anti-matter particle research and the directions they are taking toward eventually making a practical anti-matter engine for space travel.

Of course not all events had to do with current scientific research. Many purely imaginative worlds were portrayed in the art show, which was filled with creatures and machines from the authors' own minds as well as from popular literature such as the Conan the Barbarian series. Various merchants were also at the show selling books, games, and miniature figures.

Artists mix Old West themes with modern expression

Review by Brian Tuomey
Managing Editor

Images and values of an earlier Western age are reflected in the work of several artists now on exhibit at Moscow's Prichard Gallery. The exhibit, created by 14 Wyoming artists, celebrates the Wyoming Bicentennial.

Although the Western feel is evident but lacking impact in Lynne Hull's "Hedonic Oxidation," Hull created huge water-filled, horsehoe-shaped indentations within a small canyon in a pattern. The piece is represented in several photographs of the work taken from different angles. Although perhaps a symbol of the power of the early Western era, it is difficult to enjoy or understand the scope of the structure by just looking at pictures of it.

Another contributing artist, Joe Arnold, favors expansive and pastel colors. His works, allowing room in the photographs for several elements and images, are simple lines and shapes. Arnold's work is interesting and detailed, allowing room in the photographs for several elements and images.

Art in Action, sponsored by ASUI Productions, brought four area artists to the Vandal Lounge yesterday to show their stuff. Gloria Goodrich puts the finishing touches on "The Sun," a piece of Northwest Indian art. Goodrich was joined by Canadian sculptor Dudley Carter and painters Beth Rimmelspa cher and Arthur Bell.

"If you've ever been here in summer and seen how much slower it is, you know what a significant part of the community the university is," Chavez said. Chavez works for the university as production coordinator of its Engineering Outreach Program as well as for the community theater. Each show is funded by the proceeds from the previous show and by advertising in the programs. According to Chavez, the costs can be high. "A big musical show such as 'Pirates of Penzance,' which we're running in the spring, costs about $9,000 to produce," Chavez said. "We have to buy the rights to use the script and the songs," Chavez said. "Plus there's the cost of renting costumes and building the stage, among other things."
