Possible food vendor chosen

By Tracy Peele

The Marriot Corp., has been chosen as the possible private food vendor for the University of Idaho.

UI Controller Gerald R. Reynolds, who is chairman of the food service advisory committee, announced the decision Monday afternoon. He said that the decision was based upon meetings with the vendors and written evaluations.

An open meeting with the vendors will be held either later this week or the beginning of next week. The meeting will allow students to express their opinion on the proposed switch to a private vendor.

Reynolds said the meeting would allow the administration to "gain input to see if we even want to go with a privately contracted food service."

"We want to schedule it so that anyone who wants to attend can," said Reynolds. A time for the open meeting has not yet been scheduled.

Reynolds said that the present food service would also be allowed to hold an open presentation.

As UI Senators Jason Allbrecht and Tina Kagi planned to compile questions about the possible Marriot Corp. food vendor contract at the Residents' Housing Association meeting Monday night, Allbrecht said, however, that students wouldn't really know what questions to ask until they had seen a copy of the contract.

"If it looks like a good deal, and students like it, we'll go for it. But we have to look at the contract," said Allbrecht. Reynolds said it was up to the contractor to furnish the contract to the students.

The final decision on food service privatization will be made by President Gibb, probably within two to three weeks after the open meeting.

Landley Hall resident Bruce Lowther voiced his reservations about the forthcoming decision. "I'm nervous about it," he said. "I think the administration will just go for whatever is cheapest."

Several schools in the area currently use private food vendors. Lewis-Clark State College, Boise State University and Idaho State University have their food services contracted to Marriot Corp.

New math core considered

By Alan Solon
Staff Writer

A new math class for non-math majors, first proposed last semester, will be discussed today at the Faculty Council meeting.

Although the course was first suggested last spring, proposed courses must go through a number of curricular committees, and it has taken this long to get to the Faculty Council where final approval is usually given, according to math department chairman James R. Cobert.

To be called Math 101, "The Spirit of Math," the three-credit class would satisfy University of Idaho core requirement J-3-4, the math requirement for students who are not required to take any other math courses for the completion of their undergraduate degree.

It is designed for students who are curious about what math is and what mathematicians do but who do not plan to use math as a tool in their careers.

The course would involve discussion of some aspects of math through the study of problems of "applied" and "pure" types taken from areas such as number theory, geometry, topology, probability, and combinatorics. It will also cover the historical development of mathematics.

Cobert said there have been students who have been asking for a math course designed for non-math majors ever since core requirements were instituted at the university, but he added that universities must come up with real new courses before they can be added.

Statistics 150, a three-credit statistics induction course that also would satisfy the university's core requirement J-3-5, is not considered at the meeting. The course is designed to be an introduction to statistical reasoning with emphasis on examples and case studies.

Topics would include, design of experiments, descriptive statistics, measurement error, correlation and regression, probability, expectation, normal approximation, sample surveys, and tests of significance.

If approved by the Faculty Council, the courses would become effective in spring semester, 1989.

Craig says students pay for education

By Mike Lyon
Staff Writer

In a speech at the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity on Saturday, Congressman Larry Craig said that he has supported Pell grants and student loans at the federal level because the cost of education has been shifted toward the student.

Craig was campaigning in Moscow over the weekend. He spoke to guests at the ATO and Tau Kappa Epsilon houses, and attended a fund raising dinner later Saturday night.

While at the TKE reception, Craig responded to student concerns about in-state college tuition. Craig explained that this was a state issue, over which he had little say. He could, however, express his opinions on state issues to the Idaho Legislature on an annual basis.

"In 1984 I spoke to the Idaho Legislature in opposition to an in-state tuition. The reason I have opposed in-state tuition over the years is the fundamental responsibility that the state of Idaho has in providing a basic educational foundation," Craig said.

Craig said that the percentage of state support has been dropping, while the percent of individual student funding has increased. This has caused the collective student debt to triple from what it has been in the recent past. Senators today will graduate and enter the work force with a much higher debt structure than before.

"Part of the reason for this is that the expense of education has been shifted away from the traditional funding areas to new sources of money, and you (the student) are the source of money," Craig said.

"I have been an absolute stickler for pay-backs. In the late 70's and early 80's there was a great tendency to borrow all the money you could, go to college, get out of college and declare bankruptcy," Craig explained. "There is now legislation excluding student loans from bankruptcy laws."

Craig answered questions about highway 95. For the last 30 years Idaho's gas tax money has gone to match federal money to build the interstate.
Idaho refuses radioactive waste

by Christy Kretschmer
Staff Writer

Gov. Cecil Andrus has arrested any future shipments of low-level radioactive waste into Idaho unless the government builds a permanent waste repository, according to a recent Associated Press article.

The article states that over 2 million cubic feet of low-level radioactive waste from a government facility in Rocky Flats, Colo., has been stored at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. This waste was allowed to be kept in Idaho on the premise that it would be relocated to a permanent storage site.

Andrus accused the Energy Department of reneging on their promises not once, but twice. One deadline for the waste removal was set for 1983 and the other was set for October opening of the New Mexico Waste Isolation Pilot Plant.

Andrus halted the shipments of radioactive waste after his tour of the New Mexico plant. The officials in Idaho could not give him a firm date for the removal of the waste now in storage due to security concerns and a Congressional dispute over whether to give the Energy Department control of the site.

Andrus is serious about the ban. The same article quoted him as saying, "Promises have come and promises have gone. We're tired and we're not going to do it." An Energy Department spokesperson claimed that Andrus' ban was "being taken very seriously".

The governor has outlined three ways in which the state plans to enforce the ban. The Idaho Nuclear Engineering Laboratories has been informed to tell the waste shippers to cease Idaho deliveries. The Idaho State Police are to turn back any trucks carrying waste into the state, and the Public Utilities Commission will monitor the rail lines, which are the main source of transportation for waste movement.

These methods were almost used recently when a rail car carrying nuclear waste rolled into Idaho before Andrus' announcement of the ban. The Department of Energy decided to honor the ban and return the car to Rocky Flats.

According to Marc Johnson, Andrus' press secretary, the federal government has indicated its support for Andrus by not shipping any more waste. Johnson says that the governor also has support within his state. He claims that the only questions being raised are by the Attorney General.

Attorney General Jim Jones has warned Andrus that his ban could be legally challenged.

The environmentalists have called Andrus' ban "commendable, but limited." Mark Johnson thinks that they may be concerned with the safety of the new facility in New Mexico, but assures them that the governor "thinks it is safe — he went there himself."

He says that Andrus hopes that the ban has given the people in the New Mexico plant a sense of urgency.

Johnson also noted that this ban is just on low-level radiation, which gives off minimum radiation, but is long-lived. Other types of high-level radiation are shipped to Idaho and stored here. These types have been waiting in Idaho because of the delayed opening of a Nevada repository. They do pose a big threat, according to Johnson, because the amounts of high-level substances is miniscule compared to the low-level amounts.

Faculty will raise funds

by Beth Pettibon
Staff Writer

The faculty and staff have marked the beginning of their involvement in the University of Idaho's $43 million "Second Century of Distinction" fundraising campaign with the reformation of a Campus Campaign Steering Committee.

According to chair Hal Godwin, who also serves as the University's Coordinator, the eight-member committee will plan and implement faculty and staff participation in the campaign.

"Our goal is to enlarge the awareness of the campaign on campus," Godwin said. "That's the key to success in this effort. We need to demonstrate to other potential campaign contributors the momentum here on campus."

Godwin said that the activities involving the centennial celebration are not the same as the funds-raising campaign. "As the events of the celebration unfold, Founder's Day, Commencement, and other activities, it's appropriate that they complement and support the fund-raising effort," Godwin said.

The committee will advise UI Centennial Campaign Director Bill Bellknap, who serves as ex-officio member of the group, as well as help design and implement calling campaigns and materials and documents.

Correction

The October 21 Argonaut story entitled "Outdoor program issue still unresolved" contained an erroneous statement about an agreement reached between Idaho Educational Adventures and Idaho outfitters and guides. The "agreement" was actually just a proposal offered during discussion between the two groups and is not official. We regret any confusion this may have caused.

The Moscow Chamber of Commerce will be holding an issues luncheon Wednesday, Oct. 26 from 12:30 p.m. at Cavanaugh's Value Inn. A panel will discuss the state lottery. Panel members will include: State Senator Mike Blackbird who is the author of a Senate bill favoring a lottery, Stanley Crow who is representing the anti-lottery group Consider, Patrick Kole from Attorney General Jim Vines' office and Larry LaRocco who is director of the pro-lottery coalition. Phil Wendstrand, news director of KREM television, will moderate the discussion. Cost of the luncheon is $6. Reservations can be made at the Moscow Chamber of Commerce.

Five fire trucks responded to a fire call at the Gamma Phi Beta sorority at about 7:45 p.m. last night. But according to house member Molly Weyen, the "fire" was really only smoke which filled the living room when house members attempted to light a fire in the fireplace without opening the chimney flue.

Mid-term grades are being distributed in the basement of the Administration Building Annex. Student ID is required. The last day to withdraw from a course or from the university is Friday, Oct. 28.

Theophilus Tower residents will be holding a trick-or-treat night on Halloween from 5 to 7 p.m. Local children and their parents are invited. Escorts will take the children through the halls where residents will be distributing candy. A haunted house will be held in the basement. Refreshments for parents will be available in the lobby.

Dr. Donald E. Tyler, department of Sociology/Anthropology, will present a lecture entitled "Neanderthal Behavior: The Cult of the Cave Bear and Other Myths." He will discuss the evidence commonly cited to prove Neanderthal worship of cave bears, belief in an afterlife and practice of cannibalism. The lecture will be held on Wednesday, Oct. 26 at 12 noon in Phinney Hall Room 300.

Suspension questionable

Dartmouth undergoes controversy

By Greg Dickson

There is a bit of trouble with the First Amendment over at Dartmouth University.

It seems the staff of the Dartmouth Argonaut, a conservative student publication, got wind of a professor who likes to spice up his lectures with various profanities, obscenities, and vulgarities. Some took a tape recorder into his class and, to and behold, the tape narrative reflected the foul language.

The paper did a report on the professor and his style. Thence four Revue staffs went to the professor to give him a chance to reply. A confrontation ensued in which the professor lost control and assaulted an editor. In the aftermath, the Revue staffs found themselves with an 18 month suspension.

Meanwhile, the professor’s salacious letters came wondering.

Dartmouth President James Freedman, attempting to justify the suspensions, called the Revue staffers “ideological provocateurs pitting as journalists” who engage in “bullying fashion.” It should be noted here that Freedman refused to meet with the staffs to hear their side of the story. One source wonders if Freedman made these comments while keeping a straight face.

Back in the 60s, it was very fashionable to take a stand squarely opposed to any authority who stood for the status quo. The militant civil rights leaders were applauded for their willingness to confront what they saw as wrong with education and government. “Question authority” was the rallying cry. Because of their persistence, they won.

But not everyone who held the positions of power, the liberal intelligentsia do not ask unto others as they would have others do unto them.

May anyone challenge what is wrong? Why do we all speak our minds freely? Are civil rights for everyone? Why, of course. Well, that is, unless you are white, male, wealthy, conser- vatice, or Republican. One wonders if it is even possible for the Dartmouth Revue staffs to have a fair hearing in an ideological forum such as this.

John Milton said of truth, “Let her and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?”

The trouble is, the encounter is no longer free and open. The left has seized the high ground and is not willing to have their hold on it challenged. You must work within their ideological boundaries, but you may not question the validity of those boundaries.

Thus homosexuals, feminin- ate, atheists, socialists, and foul-mouthed modern artists and intellectuals have become immune from scrutiny. To look at them with any- thing short of avoidance is to be intolerant, right-minded, and an “ideological provocateur.”

The Dartmouth Revue staffs found that out the hard way, and have taken their course to the courts. For all our sakes, I hope the suspension is ruled a First Amendment violation and that the staffs win the right to attend classes again.

Although, given the quality of education at Dartmouth, I’m not sure why they would want to.

Adopting an anticipation of the imminent appearance of the divine and His reordering of the world, but so was Judaism. Mony Python’s Life of Brian did an excellent job satirizing the ribs within Judea during that cen- tury, though those divisions cleared primarily over the par- ticular leadership to be found in the awaited Messiah. Con- sidering this, recall the way the Christ is always depicted as the Son of David and led by a crowd who sensed He was on the verge of proclaiming Him king (John 6:15. See also Mark 6:33-34). Such insurrectionist energy as this, fueled by messianic hopes, flare-uped repeatedly during Jesus’ life and afterwards, cul- minating in the ill-fated Judi- sh rebellion, the destruction of the Citadels, and another dispersion of the Jews (70 AD).

Several relatively small-scale insurrections of this type are referred to by the evangelists (Mark 15:7 and Luke 13:1, 4). And it seems clear to many scholars that the two men crucified beside Christ were political criminals, members of the militant Zealot faction, who believed if they would launch a full-scale revolt that God would intervene on their side and establish His reign. In fact, one of Jesus’ own disci- ples was (formerly) a Zealot; this is Simon the Zealot, not to be mistaken for Simon Peter.

Christ’s message is apoc- alypsic. He began his mission declaring that “the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.” He parables, the Lord’s prayer, and the beatitudes and His emphasis on the imminent Day of Judgment is clear. Tell- ing His disciples that some of them will not die “until they see the Kingdom of God” (Mark 9:1, Matthew 16:27-28 and Luke 9:27) convinced many that Christ would return from Heaven to their own life or at least in John’s own lifetime (John 21:22-23). For an understand- ing of Christ’s pronuncia- tions in these and other like passages that would be rele- vant for today’s Christians, he must first come to appreci- ate what Jesus meant by “Kingdom of Heaven/of God.”

However, fitting the scope of this letter, let’s leave it as established that many Christ- ians didn’t expect to “taste death.”

It is unclear as to whether St. Paul believed that Christ would return in his own life time or not. He did, however, devote less attention to the issue in his middle and later work than in his earliest work.

In fact, the question of Christ’s return is one of the means scholars use to date Paul’s writings, which are arranged by length in descending order, not by chronology.

Please a few moral fanatics
Editor: When I started reading the letters to the editor in the Argonaut I was shocked. Greg Mather's letter of indignation over his "archipelagic" magazine being sold in the university bookstore was almost too much for me and several of my friends to swallow. One would have to wonder what would happen to Greg if he sneaked a peek at the center of one of these magazines.

Everyone is entitled to their opinion; however, Greg claims that he and others with any moral convictions are being forced to support the selling of these magazines. This is ridiculous. The only people who support the selling of these magazines are the ones who buy them.

Profits are what keep a business running. Selling these magazines must produce profits. Perhaps Martin would not continue to restock them. If Mr. Martin were to discontinue this profit generating item he might be a pissing a few moral fanatics. This would not necessarily be the general student population.

Power of the purse
Editor: This is in response to Todd Harper's commentary and Bill Grigsby's editorial, on Tuesday, Oct. 11, 1988.

President Reagan has been blamed for most of the country's problems that had nothing to do with him or the government. We are not saying that Reagan has not made mistakes, he has and everyone does, but we think the blame should be placed more deny on Congress.

Please remember back to your government class. There were senators and representatives in Congress. One of the bills given to the Congress by the Constitution is the power of the purse. This is part of their checks and balances over the executive branch (i.e. the president).

Congress decides how much money to give to the executive branch and even, perhaps, where to spend it, in the form of riders, changes and deals. The president, as chief legislator, presents a budget in a form of a bill to Congress. Congress then votes on it. They make the changes and additions to the president's bill as described above. Then it is presented to the president for signature. Congress could veto it, but what chance does he have, Congress, after working long and hard to create a bill, could easily over-ride his veto.

Basically, the president asks Congress for money and Congress gives it to him, with strings attached, and usually gives him more than he had asked for. Who is the fool, the president or those who follow the fool? What we wanted to stress, in voting for a president is great and exciting, but just as important, if not more so, is voting for the right senators and representatives. So before November 2, get a look at which congressmen want to reduce the deficit, instead of writing checks and blaming the President for it. Remember, Congress has the power of the purse.

Getting fired up over religion
Editor: I love to read the editorials and letters of response in the Argonaut. People seem to readily get fired up over some of the issues that are discussed here. Politics (especially in an election year) and religion seem to be the issues that spark the hottest debates.

In the religious arena, it's the same old factions: Christians vs. atheists. We hardly ever hear from the Hindus, Muslims or the folk, who probably have some of the most concrete beliefs in the community. I suspect it's because they are too busy struggling to survive with our sometimes thoughtful, sometimes trivial disputes.

Still, there seems to be a plethora of people on both sides of the fence who have plenty of time to rant and rave about their particular philosophy, and these provide entertaining reading.

I couldn't help those who find the time (and conviction, I might add) to write, and would add to their number by contributing my thoughts. While most Christians write from an emotional point of view insisting that their particular faction is the only way to salvation, the atheists are simply stating that there is no salvation, i.e. life after death, and no "First Cause" for this magnificient universe we live in.

Granted, science can explain many things that Christians regard as miracles, but can science provide a good explanation for how we came here? How can random chance explain such an intricately ordered universe, even down to the smallest molecule or organism we share this planet with?

For such an orderly and complex creature as man, there has to be a Creator, one who is magnificent beyond our wildest dreams, unfathomable to the keenest minds, yet willing to give a spark of himself to each of us if we'll accept him.

What hopelessness to think that we derive everything from our ancestors and then we die, it is this philosophy which promotes rampant hedonism, and lack of regard for our fellow man and the environment. It is this philosophy which think to regard this life as the first step in a long joyous career God's will move ever higher, ever closer to him while learning and serving throughout the vast universe. What amazing sights and experiences are available to our Creator's life! Take heart: death is not the end, it's only the beginning.

Lady Vandals miss weekend sweep

by Mike Lewis

What could have been the volleyball team's first weekend sweep of the season last weekend against Montana State and Montana didn't quite materialize, as the Lady Vandals dropped the final game of a five-game match against Montana Saturday and were forced to settle for a split.

After defeating Montana State rather easily in four games Friday, 15-3, 15-2, 11-15, 15-6, Idaho faced the challenge of taking on Montana, the second place team in the Big Sky.

Sophomore Stacey Aplund responded to the challenge, registering 13 kills, four solo blocks and six assisted blocks before Idaho committed two service errors and three reception errors in the fifth game, giving Montana the 15-6 win.

"Montana would've been a great win," said Idaho coach Pam Bradetich, "but we have to maintain our serve receive and serving in that fifth game to have a chance at winning." Idaho served five of its 10 aces in the fourth game of the match winning 15-4 after losing game three, 11-15, despite coming back from a 1-10 deficit.

Idaho begins a series of four road trips Thursday as they travel to Boise State to play the Big Sky-leading Lady Broncos, who are unbeaten in 10 matches in the Big Sky. Saturday night the Lady Vandals return home for their final home match of the season — and the final home match of seniors Susan Deskin's and Kesha Christiansen's careers — against non-conference opponent Gonzaga. Saturday's match begins at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Lady tracksters place third in Texas

The Lady Vandals placed third in the University of Texas Invitational in Austin, Texas on Friday behind Houston and Pan American who finished first and second respectively.

Senior Paula Parnell led the Vandals with a fourth place finish in the 5,000 meter run with a time of 18:19. Senior Louise Malvin finished 18th with a time of 20:32, followed by junior Anna Foreman in 23rd place with a time of 20:56.

"We did a good job controlling the half," said Bradetich. "We dug and passed accurately which allowed us to run our offense. But the difference in the match was our serving." Idaho served five of its 10 aces in the fourth game of the match winning 15-4 after losing game three, 11-15, despite coming back from a 1-10 deficit.

Behind the leg of kicker Thayne Doyle, the Idaho Vandals edged the Weber State Wildcats 27-24 Saturday to gain a tie with Montana State for the Big Sky Conference lead.

game was the deciding score in the game before an estimated 9,500 in the ASUI Kiddie Dome. The Vandals boosted their overall record to 6-1 and 4-1 in the Big Sky while Weber State fell to 3-4 and 2-2 in conference play.

Doyle not only hit the game-winning field goal, but he also boated three others from 52, 50 and 41 yards. The 52-yarder was the fourth best in Vandal history and only 1-yard short of the longest field goal in Vandal history.

Doyle, a redshirt freshman from Spokane, was named the Sports Network I-AA National Player of the Week even though he was handed the kicking duties only after Brian Decoto quit the team earlier in the season.

Head football coach Keith Gilbertson was pleased with Doyle’s effort. “I told him this is why we recruited you,” he said as Doyle sat beside him in the post-game interview. “You’re the best. And much to his credit he came in and knocked it through.”

“This guy is going to be a great kicker in his career at Idaho,” Gilbertson said. “It was almost a short career the way those guys were beating him in the locker room. He isn’t big enough to take that type of pounding.”

Doyle seemed to be the only Vandal offense in the first half as the two heralded offenses stalled to a 0-0 tie after the first quarter.

Doyle's first field goal of 52 yards came with 14:37 left in the second quarter. The Wildcats answered with a 10-play drive which was capped off with a one-yard touchdown run by Fine Unga on fourth down and goal to take a 7-3 lead.
After a Jerry Medved interception, the Vandals threatened to score again but failed to convert a fourth and two play from the 14-yard line. With 1:32 left in the half, Doyle kicked his second field goal from 50 yards out to cut the Wildcat lead to 7-6 at halftime.
The Vandals took the second half kickoff and drove 80 yards to take the lead 14-7 on a Devan Pearce touchdown run of three yards. The drive was highlighted by a 35-yard pass play to the Weber State 11-yard line from quarterback John Friesz to Michael Davis. Pearce completed a pass to John Joke for the two-point conversion.
Weber came back to tie the game at 14-14 on a three-yard touchdown run by Unga halfway through the third quarter. Idaho answered with another Doyle field goal of 41 yards to take a 17-14 lead.

Weber again came back to take the lead 21-14 on a 71-yard pass play from Jeff Carlson to Wade Oarton to finish off the third quarter scoring.
Weber was driving near mid-field when they faced a fourth and inches play. Willie McDonald was stopped at the line of scrimmage by Medved and safety Brian Smith and given a questionable placement of the ball.
"I think that it was obvious he didn't get a good spot on the play," Weber State coach Mike Price said. "I thought the whole game was poorly officiated on both sides."

Gilbertson saw the play a different way. "That short yardage play there has got to be the play of the game," he said.
With 9:47 remaining in the game, Friesz connected with Kasey Dunn for a eight-yard touchdown pass to take a 24-21 lead. Weber answered with a 38-yard field goal with 6:25 left to tie the game at 24-24 and set the stage for Doyle's heroics.
Inventive entertainment

Dance theater takes diverse "Inventions" to Hartung stage

by Serena Poovey
Staff Writer

Dance Inventions is the theme for the University of Idaho Dance Theater fall performance. The event, going to stage in the Hartung Theater this weekend, will feature different variety of dance.

According to Teresa Worthington, assistant director, this show's diversity makes it entertaining. Worthington feels the entertainment factor is a result of the type of dance being performed. "Most of the pieces are character dances," Worthington said.

Character dances center around a particular personality setting. For example, Barbara Olson, veteran of Dance Theater, has created a piece called "Double Dealing." The title itself suggests a specific character. Olson's dancers will portray a shadowy detective scene.

Also a comeback choreographer, Tamara Erickson has choreographed a dance with a twist unique to her style. "Big Foot Stomp" will give the audience a fun look at a hoe-down.

Dance Theater is also proud to announce Ardell Kerr, Kerr, a guest choreographer from the University of Utah, holds a master's degree in dance. She comes to Idaho to add yet another style of dance to Dance Inventions.

Wawan Margalipndja, a dance instructor from Indonesia, will provide a rare look into his culture through traditional Indonesian dance. Three UI women have learned the style of dance common to Indonesian culture, which Worthington feels was an incredible experience for the dancers.

"The body of an American doesn't move that way naturally," Worthington said. "But those girls picked it up great. You don't realize how hard it is until you try it."

Although this semester's group of dancers is much smaller than usual, Worthington is proud of their professional behavior and motivation to give the public a quality performance. She stressed the fun the group was having.

Dance theater members will take their "inventions" to the stage this weekend. After weeks of rehearsals, Shelly Werner, Barb Olson and Teresa Worthington are ready to perform.

ARGONAUT/Jason Munroe performed at the Hartung Theater Oct. 28 and 29 at 8 p.m. and Oct. 30 at 3 p.m. Admission is $4 general and $3.50 for students.

Hanks’ latest gives laugh an anguished Punch

Buddies, his film debut in Splendid and up through his 1986 release Nothing in Common. And even when that funny, goofy guy was sarcastic and in need of a little compassion (as in the ad executive David Banner in Nothing in Common), Hanks still exuded enough charisma, enough charm to make you like his character anyway.

In Punchline he turns his charisma back on himself and brings a self-destructive, agonizingly cruel character to life. Yes, medical-school-dropout, star-wanna-be Steve Gould is funny but he is also so obesessively full of himself that it is difficult to find anything else likeable about him.

While Hanks turned his acting ability on full-throttle to create the unmanered innocence of Big, Punchline finds him in dramatic overdrive. His performance is disturbing, overpowering, dazzling - easily the best work he has done. The destructive Gould is the undertow against which Hanks’ co-star Sissy Field must struggle and it is because Hanks draws you in so easily that his character’s inherent flaws are so striking.

And, expecting to find Sissy Field's weak link in the film, I was pleasantly surprised to find her character almost as affecting as Hanks’. Her monologues are also surprisingly funny.

Punchline’s story follows the “search” of Gould in a comedy club called The Gas Station where housewrite Lisa (Field) also performs. While Gould gets noticed by a national talent scout, it becomes apparent that his performing is all he has; while it puts a strain on her family life, it becomes apparent that performing is perhaps something Lisa doesn’t need. But instead of easily redeeming the situation, Seltzer (who both wrote and directed the film) avoids an obvious “follow your dreams” message and instead invites us to notice the emptiness in performing, even when it is done well.

While Hanks’ part is written impeccably, the suburban setting and the film itself is often sitcom, steoped and, after all, Fields merely has to choose between a happy family life and commercial success. It is rather hard to feel sorry for her.

A plus to the situation is the performance of John Goodman as Field’s husband. Goodman has spiced up such deferent films as True Stories and Raising Arizona and here he proves he can sustain a full character without the support of a caricatured role.

Punchline's ending is a bit jagged and unfulfilling, leaving us unsure that Gould, who earlier suffers a haunting breakdown onstage and spookily clowns in a rainy intersection in response to Lila's compassion, has either the talent or the emotional stability to be the star he seems destined to become.

And why does Seltzer frame his film with Lila's story, anyway? It is easy to tell 15 minutes into the film that the challenging task would be to redeem Gould, not to have a happy ending for Lila.

Despite stumbles, though, Punchline finds a razor-sharp ribbing of anguish inside the machinery of laughter.

Punchline will play at 7 p.m. and 9:15 p.m. at the Cordova Theatre in Pullman. A discount show will play on Sundays at 4 p.m.
