Finalist Zinser: ‘People will stereotype me’

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

The woman who told her city newspaper she wasn’t shopping for a university presidency visited the UI this week as a finalist to replace retiring UI President Richard Gibb.

One month after Elizabeth Zinser told the Greensboro (N.C.) News and Record she wasn’t interested in leading a university, she applied for the UI post. Zinser, 48, is vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of North Carolina-Greensboro. Last spring, she accepted and later resigned as president of an all-deaf university.

Six months after resigning as president of Gallaudet University, Zinser told a News and Record reporter “That’s (Gallaudet) the only institution that could have interested me in leaving (UNCO) at this time.” Within a month after the Sept. 19 article, she had met the October application deadline for the UI presidency.

Zinser resigned from her position at Gallaudet in March, after serving four days. Students at the all-deaf school protested because they wanted to replace Zinser with a deaf president.

One of four finalists for the UI presidency, Zinser met with university and community leaders Tuesday and Wednesday.

The next president will take office July 1 after Gibb retires. As the only female finalist for the UI presidency, Zinser says she uses stereotypes to her advantage.

“When I walk into a room, people will stereotype me,” Zinser said. “But when I start giving an organized presentation that may be outlines some of the others, it’s so disarming they give me more credit than they might have otherwise.”

The next UI president needs to assert the university’s role as Idaho’s land-grant “flagship” institution, Zinser said Tuesday in a Faculty Council meeting.

“It needs to be extremely clear that the president of the University of Idaho is regarded as a senior leader in higher education,” Zinser said. “The only way is if the president commands respect.”

Greeks, dorms call truce in snowball wars

By KARA GARTEN
Staff Writer

The $4,914 of damage caused by last fall’s snowball fight won’t result in a direct housing fee increase, but a compromise is being created to resolve relations between Greeks and hall residents.

After the Dec. 14 snowball fight, which caused damage to Gulf, Urbain and Willis Sweet halls and an unspecified amount of damage to Greek houses, Interfraternity Council President Jason Kelley and Residence President Kelley Knecht sent a letter to the Residence Hall Association and proposed a meeting to discuss the situation.

The decision to form a special committee came from this initial Jan. 17 meeting.

“We can’t solve all the problems in just one meeting, so we are setting up a committee,” said Paula Wood, RHA president.

The committee will be made up of three Greek representatives and three representatives from the dorms, Wood said.

Kelley said he was encouraged by the improvement in relations already.

“They (RHA) were receptive and we and we’ve made pretty good progress,” he said.

But while the committee works to avoid problems in the future, there is still the problem of paying for the damage already done.

“There was a dollar amount published for damage to the halls, but it is hard to get an accurate figure for the amount of damage to (Greek) houses,” Kelley said.

“There were some pretty badly damaged houses,”

Kelley said that Greek houses work with tight budgets and residents will have to come up with the money to cover the damage to their own house. The hall residents won’t feel the cost right away, he said.

“There were rumors of dorm residents throwing snowballs at their own windows. If they did that it’s because there are no direct costs felt there,” Kelley said.

There will not be a housing rate increase to cover the cost of repairs, according to James Bauer, assistant dean of student services. The money will come out of the general housing fund. If the repairs had not been necessary, the money would have been used to improve the dorms.

Bauer said he hopes the snowball fight won’t cause similar problems in the future.

UI signs research agreement with Hanford

By JILL CHRISTINE BECK
Editorial Staff Writer

Research and competition in the Northwest could benefit from a collaborative agreement signed Wednesday by the UI and the Department of Energy’s Pacific Northwest Laboratory officials.

“We are creating a Northwest center for science and engineering,” said William Wiley, director of PNL. Formerly known as Hanford Laboratories, PNL is operated by Battelle Memorial Institute.

“We have to come up with better ways to make the United States more competitive in the international market,” said Joseph Stacey, manager of the research and development division of DOE’s Richland operations office. “Our science and engineering work force (in the United States) is eroding.”

With the agreement, officials both on and off campus hope to make the Northwest more competitive on national and international levels.

Officials will identify collaborative research fields and joint use of facilities and equipment. Possible benefits of the agreement include environmental issues such as the “greenhouse effect,” Wiley said.

But Chuck Broncos, a board member of the environmental activist group Hanford Watch, sees such agreements between universities and DOE as conflicts of interest.

Broncos said money received from DOE has strings attached which keep research from uncovering negative aspects.

“It almost doesn’t matter to Richard Gibb what the money is for,” Broncos said. If research money comes from DOE Gibb is “going to be very careful about the results that come out of it,” he said.

“It’s the university’s job to be an open arena for the generation of new ideas,” he said.

Broncos said Hanford Watch encourages research, especially in environmental areas, but the group says universities could remain credible by getting research funding from independent sources.

Other possible areas of research under the agreement have not been identified. “This can only benefit them,” said Jeanne Steveson, associate vice president for research.

ASUI wants UI to foot TAAC increase

By BETH PETITION Staff Writer

Student government officials could ask the University to pay part of the $5,000 spring budget increase requested by the UI tutoring center, the ASUI president said Wednesday.

President Tina Kagi said instead of requiring the ASUI to pay half of the increase, the administration could pay the entire amount.

"The possibility of the UI to fund all $5,000 is very strong," Kagi said. Kagi will be meeting with officials this week to work on the decision.

ZINER icon page 1 in a diplomatic way.

The university faces "challenges in a board division," Zinser said, referring to competition with Boise State University. Her priority, as UI president, would be to bring minorities into scientific fields where they are not traditionally involved, Zinser said. She would focus on regional minorities.

Faculty council members sidestepped both Zinser's gender and her four-day stint as president of Gallaudet. Faculty members may have intentionally avoided the topics, said Peter Haggart, Faculty council chairperson.

"If they did feel that (gender was an issue) they wouldn't have been bold enough to make that statement," Haggart said.

"She's not a liaison, she's a well-qualified candidate," said Haggart, also a member of the screening committee.

In addition, Haggart said Zinser may have answered potential questions by releasing a three-page article explaining her position, as Gallaudet.

Other goals Zinser named include expanding the university's national exposure and global perspective and increasing scientific literacy. Like David Anderson, the finalist to visit campus before her, Zinser said she wants to open relationships with faculty and students.

"I wouldn't be happy in any institution that didn't encourage input," Zinser said. "Students and Zinser we have the institution in the first place, and the faculty is the heart and soul of its programs."

Part of accepting input, Zinser says, is to keep others informed about her decisions.

"I do believe in communication," Zinser said. "I don't believe in making a decision without consultation, and once it's made, people have a right to know the outcomes."

Zinser said she holds a month-and-five annual review to get student opinions at UNC.

"Consistently you need to be informed before the press informs them," Zinser said. "You cannot have a year without the president,—it's just as important for students not to surprise constituents."

If selected pre-first here, Zinser said she plans to stay at the university about 10 years.

"If you really want to make a difference, you're not going to make a difference in two, three or five years," she said. "It's a long-term investment."

After that, Zinser says she may pursue government offices.

Zinser said her biggest asset is her honesty. Her biggest weakness, she says, is the need for "long-term, systematic planning."

"She's a top-notch administrator," said President Tom Bell, who visited her last spring. "I talk too much.

Library wants $11.5 million for phase two expansion

By LEN ANDERSON
Staff Writer

University librarians are blowing dust off books as they move the books into the new basement. A big job takes a long week.

The storage facility is the first of two phases of construction at the UI library. The phases were proposed in a 1986 study, said Ron Force, associate dean of library services.

"We tried to do an evaluation of the present building and a projection as to what needed to be done," Force said.

The library originally was designed for a campus of 3,500 students. Force said. It reached capacity in 1997 and since, stor- ing was reduced to hold more books.

"The average library doubles in size every 17 years," Force said.

The first stage of construction, which lasted one year, ended in January. During this state-funded $6.25 million stage, contractors renovated the library basement for book storage. State funding is needed to begin the second stage of renovation, which would include a $30 percent addition to the facilities.

The Idaho Board of Education proposed a $4.18 million bill from the Idaho legislature, Force said. The request is now at the top of the UI state funding priority list, he said.

The Idaho legislature, however, has an annual building budget of $7 million.

To date, the legislature has not approved the plan for university building bonds.

UI student government leaders are afraid student fees would be used to pay the interest on building bonds.

"The main concern is that student fees don't increase," ASU President Tina Kagi said. "The state has some very fundamental problems with raising money for state buildings."

"The average library doubles in size every 17 years," —Ron Force

UI Library Services

The Idaho legislature failed to pass Senate Bill #313. The bill would have authorized the legislature to fund more than $40 million in building bonds to Idaho universities.

Student leaders opposed the plan because it allowed officials to use student fees to guarantee payment of the bonds.

The university originally used bonds to build the library, and no more were issued in the 1970s, Force said.

Stage one of the 20-year upgrade included the addition of new compact storage shelves, said Morris Steiger, the library associate dean who worked with the contractors. The 54,000 linear feet of shelves are packed tightly against each other.

"Librarians can move the shelves apart by rotating a crank on the shelves. Even with the shelves filled completely, librarians can still turn the crank with a finger," Force said.

To protect books in the basement, contractors also fixed ventilation and installed a high-tech security system. In addition they sealed the basement foundation material from water, removed asbestos, improved lighting, replaced transformers and upgraded the electrical system.

The basement shelves, not for student use, can hold as many as 275,000 books. Students may ask librarians to retrieve books, however.

Librarians had placed books in the basement, but some were damaged from improper facilities, Force said.

"The basement was never intended to be used for anything," Force said. "Over the years, we started transferring books into that space."

The basement at one time was a rotating storage. As soon as funds are generated, library expansion will begin, Force said. Foundation and construction may disrupt students daily workflow in the library, he said.

In the first step of phase two, contractors will expand the library third floor. Lack of funds or halted construction of the third floor.

Second, contractors plan to expand the upper four floors on the library. They had planned to expand the library toward Ben- frow Hall, but are considering alternatives because there may not be sufficient space between the two buildings.

Contractors in 1957 installed removable windows on the Renwef side of the library to make the building easier to expand, Force said.

The library will also take over the space the campus post office now occupies, Force said. Force said librarians also plan to move microfilm cabinets and map files because they cause the floors to sag.

Eventually, librarians plan to install new computers which would allow access to library reference from regional libraries and other computers on campus, said Eileen Hitchingham, dean of library services.

Please don’t embarrass yourselves

T this is getting embarrassing. For the past four weeks, editors and writers for this paper have been asked by several university officials to read articles before they appear in print.

For example, Carol Gruppi, UI risk management assistant, embarrassed herself by asking to preview the Argonaut’s article on the new Integral Help Employment Service. She was afraid early publicity about the program would hurt its success.

“I would like to see the article before it’s published,” she said, “but you’d probably have a problem with that.” Our answer, “Yes, we do have a problem with that.”

AGUI Senators also like to read the Argonaut before the rest of university community. Recently, Sen. Craig McCurry embarrassed himself by bowing in the newspaper office in hopes of reading an article on a School of Music Department request to the Senate for travel funds.

And after a one-hour interview with UI purchasing agents regarding the Cem of the Mountains yearbook contract, they had the audacity to ask the reporter to see the article before its publication.

Come on people, get some media smarts. U.S. newspapers are the watchdogs of American society. And by their very nature, institutional guarantees, cannot permit individuals to approve or disapprove news reports. If they did, we’d have a nation of public-relations releases, not newspapers.

The Argonaut is not like the U.S. public relations organs, and will not allow controversial or negative information to be glossed over prior to review.

However, if you, as a source, would like to double-check a reporter’s information, you are free to ask them to provide you with a transcript of the interview.

But at no time is any student, faculty member of staff members permitted to read a soon-to-be-published article in full.

So, please don’t embarrass yourself by making such a ridiculous request.

BLACKS RESIST OPPRESSION

Violence used in apartheid fight

Tough choices lie ahead for the leaders of the South African government.

Having virtually no political or ideological support within the country for its policies, the government is faced with the reality that continued apartheid policies are impossible without cooption.

The 56,000 blacks arrested and detailed for political reasons since 1965 attest to this. Police forces have broken up meetings, shot demonstrators, jailed leaders and restricted the press. As forces protecting the government’s authority are strengthened, black resistance to racial oppression continues.

Although the omission of political rights is a fundamental cause for Black resistance, the most glaring reason for the civil strife in South Africa, other causes are the acts of the black rebellion.

The government can no longer guarantee political stability to foreign investors. This, coupled with the divestment by corporations protesting apartheid, has produced a recession exacerbating black unemployment (currently estimated at about 50 percent of the economically active population).

The high unemployment rate and recession contribute to the perception of liberal whites’ main claim of government legitimacy which employs a materialist-economy maximizing material well-being for the entire country.

The state controls access to land, services and housing. The current legislation form a government of the people, by the people and for the people. We are one of the people, and if that means something that doesn’t want to listen to the demands of the people. There is no alternative but to follow what the African National Congress has told us submit or fight.

Describing the increasingly large numbers of violent black youth, Bishop Desmond Tutu stated, “They are the first generation of this liberation, come hell or high water. And if that means something they are going to die or that they have to move forward, all they say is ‘The liberation is going to be watered with our blood.’

As the grasp of police control becomes tighter on black society, its resistance is rising. Along with this, violence is used.

Has Brother Jed reformed lives?

Here’s a great response to the call for Jed and Cindy anecdotes. Observation about Jed.
Jed’s style of pacing, gestures, and similar behavior were carbon copies of ex-basketball Coach Tim Floyd’s body language in front of the Vandal bench during games.

Quot:
One day brother Jed was going on and on about the evils of drugs, alcohol, and men’s clothing, and as an example of a very promising college football player who had made the team and was doing well in school only to fall victim to these temptations. His concluding remark was that the athlete was suspended from college and could not find another college in which to enroll or play football. At this point a voice—girl from the audience boomed, “Have him contact BSU, they’ll play him!”

Thanks readers for your overwhelming response to the Jed and Cindy question. Just so there’s a question involved here.

Q: How many people’s lives were reformed as a direct result of Jed’s sermon?

A: That’s too hard to research.

Q: Does anyone in the Vandalid/Pap Band have an IQ higher than 27?
A: I dare to get personal, but this question really reaches a nerve.

My boyfriend is in the pap band and his name is, “Hey, I sometimes get so high as sittin’ on a good day.”

Q: Why is the Found Money found by the Foundation and when some living beings pass the hat or raise money and donate it a public relations gesture?
A: According to Terry Arms-

3. In the Regular Find, there are Retroactive Finds: bringing in the amount which you remember finding in the past or Commodity Finds: selling something you find (e.g. a golf ball) and donating the amount.

Donations like the ones questioned fall into the Organizational Find category, where people might bring in a money from a combination of fines, finds, and others sources. I suggested that this last category be called “Wanna-Be Found Money,” since the person who make such donations are treating it as actually “Found.” Also note: the Fund is nearing the $50,000 mark. With it will over the top?

Q. Just how cold does it have to get before they close this University?
A. Obviously, pretty cold, since many people were claiming that hell had actually frozen over Fri.

Day. We can’t assume the university would close school in that case. However, we can assume that the person who does make the decision doesn’t have to walk to campus (or drive a Volkswagen). Next time it happens, declare the holiday and instructors were very understanding about absence, especially when they couldn’t afford their car either.

Q. Should we solve the problem of the national debt by conquering other countries, or by taxing cigarettes? Or would it be a good idea to sell patent corned beef with images of who’s been on a diet and who’s on a reducet diet?
A. Or Congress could reduce spending!

Q. A strange precedent is being set as late-sorubers decisions that directly and/or indirectly affect students are made with much regard for students’ habits (i.e. food service, blue study buckets). Don’t the UI administrators realize they could be alienating future alumna contrib-arbles for one will not be “digging deeply into my pockets” after graduation.

A. Obviously not, or a synapse is missing somewhere. Or another way to look at it: quoting a 1986 graduate, “The university never seemed to pass us a chance to take advantage of the students.”

Of course, the students are usually placated by the presence of other students on whatever committees making the decisions. But who are these students, and do they have any real power? Read on, and make your voice heard. Committees like this are taking applications now.

Q. The suspension of the care parking lots on campus was a debatable subject. Any chance they can be made into normal parking again by the same references?
A. No, no, no and no. Further, they are proposing banning parking lots within a handy eight—ten minute walk to campus. Apply to join the Parking Committee now, before it’s too late!

Harper argues for the Pepsi-

Generation

Editor:
The purpose of this letter isn’t

To much so express the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of abordeed, again it is an expose on the shallow, insipid selfishness of this generation, using Todd Harper’s irresponsible commentary, “Pro-liers are pro-overpopulation” (Feb. 7), as an example.

Regarding shallowness, this article states erroneous facts without reference, and sensation-alis their implications. His argument is that “pro-life” groups all over the world are not supporting life, but rather the genocide of the human race through overpopulation.

This sillentiousness seems to be accompanied by a high degree of irresponsibility.

Finally, who’s to say if anyone of us would be around now if the abortion laws weren’t in effect some twenty years ago? If we are as selfish as Todd, we wouldn’t have to be grateful they were in existence then.

Of course, this was never intended to be a rebuttal to Todd’s commentary. He was only an argument maintaining the irresponsibility of the Pepsi-

Generation. Each of us needs to re-evaluate our opinions as to their selfishness and sensibility.

Lech gives law school challenge

By DAVID KELLY
Staff Writer

The mysterious "Lech" and the "Freak Street Band" have worked their way over to the UI law school and have taken up residence in the University of Iowa Law School Library. Their goal is to become the most popular campus act this year for the Mardi Gras Inc. annual music competition. The competition, as is often the case, is probably the least restrained on campus. The band fabulously described as "a collective joke" by one of the members, will be a welcome change of pace in the competition and will be sure to bring a smile to the face of anyone not expecting a law school act.

Femmes recapture inspiration

Review by PAUL GREENWOOD
Staff Writer

A band once dismissed as a dead item has returned from the crypt with a new album and a return to their more traditional style to prove to disbelievers that there is, indeed, life after death. The Violent Femmes started the decade out as one of the most exciting and promising young bands. With their neurotic, angry, angst-ridden message blended with an energetic, minimalist, nerve-tickling sound, their first, self-titled album ranks as possibly one of the decade's best underground albums.

Unfortunately, somewhere along the line the Femmes lost track of what made them a great band in the first place. Their next two albums were dramatically over-produced, lyrically overburdened with religious themes and overall, uninspired.

Their new album, 0, however, seems to be a refreshing step in the right direction. They've revolved their style more toward that of their first album, while still adding new, interesting ideas to keep listeners interested.

Femmes has all the fundamental elements of the kind of band that makes good music. Lyrically, it is moody, grotesquely self-indulgent, absurdly depressing and down-right whiny to the point of almost being annoying.

"Somewhere along the line the Femmes lost track of what made them a great band..."

Good. That's exactly what we liked about them in the first place. It would indeed be a sad day when Gordie Gano, their lead singer, seemed secure, stable, happy and started singing songs about finding the perfect girl, getting married, settling down in the suburbs and attempting to fit into society. We must all say a collective prayer that, at least for the next couple of albums (hopefully), Gano stays bummed and confused about life. Without that certain note of desperate pleading, the Femmes were, indeed, just a cut above your average band.

In one of his many bouts of desperate pleading, he sings, "There's nothing worth living for tonight, tell me that there's something worth living for tonight. Don't let me down, don't let me drown, the pain is very close to me."

Blatantly and openly acknowledging his inner pain and confusion about the meaning of his life or perhaps, the lack thereof, he is sometimes capable of tapping that depressed streak in all of us. By bringing it out in the open, these rather depressing lyrics sometimes have the ironic effect of actually being uplifting for the simple merits of their honesty.

Such everyday mind-racking, soul-disturbing, minor incidents such as not receiving a phone call back from a girlfriend, being stripped down, then over-blown and finally given a potent examination through a very emotional, perspective, allowing all of us to momentarily plunge into a P.O.V. state of somewhat healthy nihilism and pity: hopefully to return, thankful, that we aren't really as depressed ourselves.

Used book stores offer alternative recreation

By DAVID KELLY

Used books may be among the most low-cost forms of entertainment for college students. Two local bookstores, Twice Sold Tales and Brushed Books of Pullman, cater to students' budgets, selling books at just a fraction of the original cost.

"We have a couple of cans, a couple couches, a very relaxed atmosphere," said Rich Wright, a Twice Sold Tales employee. "It's just a great place to hang out and look for that book you wanted to read, but didn't want to pay full cover price for."

Twice Sold Tales, offering a large selection with more than 60,000 titles, specializes in science fiction/fantasy, general fiction and historical novels. The store also carries light romances such as the Carl Hiaasen series, mysteries, non-fiction and some magazines.

"We have nearly every issue of Playboy and National Geographic for the last 10 years," said Wright. "Some of them are even collector's items."

Twice Sold Tales operates on a tradesell basis. Those who bring books in receive one-fourth of the original cover price in credit, which can be applied to other books priced at one-half the original cover price. "It averages out to two to one," Wright said.

According to Wright, the most popular books at Twice Sold Tales are those written on a more intellectual level by young, British "new wave" writers such as Jay McInerney, author of Bright Lights, Big City.

"Also in high demand are horror novels by Stephen King, Peter Straub and Dean Koontz. "We also have quite a few classics," Wright said. "It is a lot less expensive to buy them from us."

Brushed Books, owned and operated by Bruce Cullkins of Pullman, also operates on the two-for-one system. Cullkins buys books, as well as selling and trading them.

"Owning a used bookstore was just something I only half-heartedly thought about doing, but seven a half years ago the opportunity arose," Cullkins said.
Group suffers no stage fright

"We are strictly a comedy group," Stage Fright director Medallie Angwell said.

They claim that they can take any prop and turn it into a short, funny skit.

Although schedule conflicts hampered rehearsals last semester, the actors are scheduled to perform again this year, Angwell said.

Dancers offer variety

By STEPHANIE BALEY

All aspects of dance will be explored when dance theater performs "A Centennial Concert" March 3-5.

The project attracts not only dance majors and minors but anyone who enjoys dance, said Diane Walker, director of dance theater. The performance offers a diversity of dances, including jazz, ballet, tap, modern and cultural.

Wawan Margapoeradj from Indonesia will be arranging dances and will perform a traditional dance with his wife. He is a graduate student in dance pedagogy and production.

"His presence here has enriched the whole program," Walker said.

Students can take the one-credit dance and theater class which will run until the end of the performance.

"It is a lot of hard work and taken up a lot of time but it is fun and it's interesting to see the different variety of dancers," said Valerie Lavender. This is the third semester she has taken the class.

Although auditions are required for the class, there are dances for all skill levels from beginners to advanced, giving everyone the opportunity to participate.

About 40 students are involved in the project. The Centennial theme will feature some repertoire pieces for a total of about 15 original dances.

Choreographer Karen Mullen said it provides good experience for novice choreographers, giving them the chance to experiment and get their work on stage. Mullen also said that dance theater is a good opportunity for college students to get exposed to the arts.

"It exposes them to all the gen- eral ideas in one evening," Mullen said.

Performances run March 3-4 at 8 p.m. at the Hartung Theater and March 5 at 3 p.m. Tickets are available through Ticket Express.

moody as the members of this band.

"But you don't return my calls, I'm ready to bust down these walls, I'm going down Niagara Falls in a barrel. Hey, ain't the lucky one."

Depressing? Maybe. But the Violent Femmes are surging out of a depressed artistic streak and are back in proper format. It is unlikely that they will come out with an album quite as classic as their first one. But with their return to a similar style that this album offers, they may begin to again forge their reputation as one of the most promising bands around.

"At Brused Books science fiction, fantasy and mysteries are the most popular, with general fiction and literature a close second. Most Brused Books customers are older individuals, families and college students. "I always expected that there would be more students interested in reading than there are," Culkins said.

Cassidy defends NRA stand

NRA executive vice president addresses UI students

By DAVID KELLY
Staff Writer

Public officials' ignorance is infringing upon personal freedoms, a National Rifle Association official said Tuesday.

NRA Executive Vice-President J. Warren Cassidy addressed 66 students concerning the erosion of personal liberties included in the Bill of Rights during his lecture "Will the American Dream Survive the 20th Century?"

"Everyone should have the right to keep and bear arms as stipulated in the second amendment, even though many lawmakers are proposing legislation placing restrictions on guns and their owners," Cassidy said.

One student said that in Idaho, guns are everywhere — in the back windows of trucks, homes and sometimes even in offices. This is more of a problem in larger cities and states with higher populations. Idaho doesn't suffer as states like California, Cassidy said.

Cassidy also answered questions concerning armor-piercing bullets, saying that under the second amendment, U.S. citizens should be able to use armor-piercing bullets. However, armor-piercing bullets have not been on the legal market for more than five years except for sale to police departments and military agencies.

"The NRA believes in and tries to uphold all laws," Cassidy said.

Brown dominates Big Sky

By GERON KOSOFF

Catch him while you can, Vandal fans. Raymond Brown’s days in the Dome are, unfortunately, coming to a close.

However, it looks as if he and the Vandals will go out in style as Idaho is on a mission for the 1988-89 Big Sky Championship — thanks largely to Brown’s dominating play.

A leader in several areas of the game, Brown’s numbers speak for themselves.

Recently named Big Sky Player of the Week, Brown leads the Vandals with an average of 16.1 points and 7.9 rebounds per game and shoots a hot 52.9 percent from the field.

And who leads the famed Vandal Dunk Club? None other than Brown, with 27 jams. Many opposing teams have had front row seats while watching Brown soar above the rim, a soft lob pass and ram it home.

But offense is hardly all of Brown’s game. It is his presence on defense that separates him from the rest of the field and places him on top. And there is strong support for that claim.

“I think he’s the best forward in our league,” said Head Coach Kermit Davis.

Davis said he takes nothing away from other players, but Raymond’s defense is what separates him from the pack.

“Guys come in the key and they know Raymond will be there,” he said.

Certainly opposing players have felt Brown’s presence. He leads the Big Sky in blocked shots, averaging 1.7 per game.

Need more evidence?

Remember when Idaho steam-rolled Weber State on Jan. 26 in a front of season-high 5,000 fans in the Dome? Brown held Rico Washington, the Big Sky’s co-scooping leader, in a season-low 14 points and frustrated him the entire game. According to Weber State Coach Danny Hueston, “Brown defended very, very well. He just did a masterful job of defending Rico.”

A native of Atlanta, Brown began basketball in the eighth grade. His Sylvan High School team compiled an incredible 47-7 record his final two years. Brown made first team all-state and All-

Metro Atlanta as a senior and was named pre-season high school All-American by Street and Smith magazine.

Brown began his college career in 1984 at Mississippi State University and was a two-year star.

He was named to two freshmen All-SEC teams, and in 1985-86 was the 19th leading scorer in the Southeastern Conference. After a coaching change at MSU his sophomore year, a former assistant coach convinced him to transfer to Idaho.

Coach Smith optimistic about new recruits

By SCOTT TROTER
Sports Editor

New UI head coach John L. Smith can relax for the time being, after 18 recruits signed letters of intent on Wednesday to play football at the university. "I think it's just a good all-around year," Smith said about this year's recruits. "I think we have a little more speed than we've had in the past. That was the main thing and I think most of our kids can run." The kids have some big shoes to fill. UI is coming off its best season in the team's history, finishing 1-2 and reaching the semifinals of the NCAA Division I-AA Playoffs. The Vandals finished the regular season as the No. 1 ranked I-AA team in the nation and won its second-straight Big Sky Conference Championship, the first team since 1975 to accomplish that feat. Reggie Smith (DB, 5'8", 172 lbs) heads the list of new recruits.

He is the ninth player since 1982 to come to Idaho from L.A. Valley Junior College, and he is the son of former Los Angeles Dodger and Boston Red Sox-great Reggie Smith Sr. At L.A. Valley, Smith Jr. was among the team's leaders in tackles and was the team's top kickoff returner. In one game last fall he returned six kickoffs for 246 yards and a 41-yard average per return, including a 96-yard touchdown return. Promising recruits Eddie Evli- zewski (OL, 6'4", 225 lbs) and Tyt- er Hineman (DE, 6'4", 215 lbs), both from Juanta High School in Bellevue, Wash., also signed letters of intent.

Evliuzewski made All-Kingco Conference honors as a wide receiver and free safety, while Hineman was a first-team All-Kingco Conference selection as both a tight end and defensive end. Smith signed three recruits from southern Idaho: Centennial High School's Don Hunter of Mer- idian, Yo Murphy of Idaho Falls HS and Kyle Russell of Nampa HS.

Stad Blair, Jody Schung and Eric Thomas, all of Spokane also signed, along with Jeff Jordan of De- nver.

Others recruits who signed from the state of Washington are Trevor Hines, Isaiah, Spencer Lea, Soren Preis, of Shelton, Kevin Willey of Kent and Andrea Veen of Pasco.

From Oregon the Vandals picked up Justin LaVienne and Doug Nussmeter of Lake Owne-

Brandy Harris, Jimmy. Lee Jackson, Jr. and Joe Carrasco also joined the Vandals by signing earlier this year.

EVENyONE tAlks ABOuT CHANGING THE WORLD. THIS YEAR 3750 PEOPLE WILL ACTUALLY DO IT.

Not everyone is cut out to change the world. After all, it takes education, skills and a spare two years. Also a willingness to work hard.

This year's 3,750 Americans will go the Peace Corps to do just that, They'll do things like build roads, plant forests and crops, teach English, develop small businesses, train community health workers, or even coach basketball. However what they're doing isn't half as important as the fact that they've changed a little piece of the world...for the better.

And when they return, these 3,750 Americans will find that experience doing hard work will have another benefit. It's exactly what their next employers are looking for.

So, give the Peace Corps your next two years. And while you're out changing the world, you'll also be making a place in it for yourself.

Tracksters host all-comers meet in Kibbie on Saturday

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

The Vandal men’s and women’s track teams hosted the Cavanaugh’s Indoor All-Comers Track and Field Meet this Saturday in the Kibbie Dome.

The meet is open to all independent high school and college athletes.

Dave Cook of UI Sports Information said he was expecting to see close to 400 athletes participate in the event.

The meet should make some good competition for the Vandal teams who qualified six athletes for the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in March.

Ode Ballantyne qualified in the long jump for the men’s team. The women’s team supplied the rest of the Idaho qualifiers with five, including Stacey Appledor in the high jump, Caryn Choate-Deeds in the 55 and 200, Kim Gillar also in the 55 and Scott in the 400 hurdles.

Both teams should also be well-rested since neither had a meet since Jan. 28.

UI senior Ode Ballantyne will by-pass this weekend’s indoor meet and travel to the University of Nebraska along with three other members of the men’s team for a meet consisting of 35 college teams.

Field events for the All-Comers meet begin at 8 a.m. and running events start at 10 a.m.

BROWN on page 10

And the giant jump across the states has been a prosperous one, at least for the most part.

"I don’t like the snow," Brown said with a slight grin. "Well, I like it, but not all the time."

And the Idaho people? "Oh, I love the people," Brown said. "They’re warm and have their hands out all the time."

Brown has flourished with the Idaho basketball program. Selected to the All-Big Sky first team last season, the Vandals first since 1985, he is a prime candidate again this season.

"What Raymond Brown has done for our team is what he does in practice day in and day out," Davis said. "He comes out and really plays hard. The other guys usually see Raymond and pick up on his hard work."

The Vandals, 18-3 overall, 8-1 in the Big Sky, are riding high on an eight game winning streak. Will they continue to rise? Brown thinks so.

"We’ll get better," Brown said. (A scary thought for other teams.) "We’re rising to the top. We’re like on a scale, still climbing the ladder, just haven’t reached it yet."

Summer leagues can be a valuable learning experience for players, as the competition is usually pretty stiff. Brown returns to the Atlanta summer league each summer and has played against the likes of Magic Johnson and Dominique Wilkins.

"I just watch," Brown said, implying he learns from watching these superstars. He has obviously watched closely.

"Raymond could play most big people in the country," Davis said. "If he keeps playing hard, he’ll get his shot to play at the next level (the NBA)."

Brown said he would like to extend his basketball career beyond graduation.

"If it (NBA) comes, if not, life goes on," Brown said.

Brown feels graduation will be a great accomplishment. Although he is finishing up his last season, Brown will return either this summer or next fall to finish his recreation major.

So why wait to possibly catch the Raymond Brown show in the pros? Catch him while you can.
