Finalist Furgason: Firings were unavoidable

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

Firings of university professors in a 1981 "financial emergency" were unavoidable, says a finalist for UI president and ac-cademic vice president during the campaign.

"Anytime someone loses a position, they call it unnecessary," said finalist Robert Furgason in an additional meeting with the Faculty Council. "If you have to do an entire program, you have to do it."

But the Idaho Supreme Court determined the financial emergency a "hoga emergency," the president of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors said Monday evening.

AAUP President Richard Dozier said fired faculty memers have been paid more than $1 million in out-of-court treatments.
The AAUP has placed the university on notice for several policy, including the financial emergency policy, said Dozier, also an associate professor English at the university.

The censure "doesn't serve the university well," said Furgason.

"The AAUP has made a mistake," said Furgason.

"Removing the censure is up to the Idaho Board of Education and

In separate an so to put the university back in good standing with the association, he said.

"It's a fact that rates go up—it shouldn't be a surprise to anybody," Furgason said. "It's just the way the world works these days."

Important issues students face include AIDs and condom ma-achines availability in residence halls, Furgason said. Students must also learn to be opened-minded, he said.

Phone-a-thon to hire non-student solicitors

Fund drive now tied to Centennial

By LEN ANDERSON
Staff Writer

Non-students will be among a crew of more than 125 paid telephone solicitors to be hired next month to begin the university's $2.4 million phone-a-thon fund drive.

And the fundraising drive, which was originally moved to the spring so that it would not compete with other Centennial fundraising programs, is now being treated as an integral part of Centennial fundraising campaigns.

For the past three weeks, this newspaper has requested information about plans for the phone-a-thon, but Alumni officials said details, including the date of the phone-a-thon, had not been finalized. Friday, Annual Fund Director Linda Williams announced that the fund drive would begin March 20 and run through mid-June.

Last year, the phone-a-thon raised $200,000, she said.

To meet a new five-year, $2.4 million phone-a-thon goal, volunteer student phone-callers will be replaced with trained, paid solicitors. Moscow residents, who may not have affiliations with the university, will be among those hired, Williams said.

During the fund drive, solictors will ask UI alumni to make five-year donation commitments.

Williams said since this year's phone-a-thon will be held after Christmas, some problems could arise in trying to get pledges.

"I think asking for five-year commitments is going to be a harder sell than having it in the spring," Williams said.

At the next phone-a-thon, which Williams said will probably occur in the fall, the hired solicitors will contact both the alumni who make five-year commitments this year and those who do not make another pledge.

"We are asking our alumni to make 'stretch gifts,' to stretch their resources to make a one-time commitment for our 100th year birthday," Williams said.

"Even the people who have made five-year capital campaign pledges will be asked for annual contributions in the future."

Capital campaigns similar to the Centennial campaign also may occur again in five years after the alumni commitments have expired.

"If we are in another capital campaign situation, which we may well be in five years, then we may go back to them and ask for five-year commitments," Williams said.

"Traditionally, once a university goes into the capital campaign mode, that seems to be more of an ongoing process rather than once every 100 years."

Annual Fund Director

Many alumni will not pledge a five-year commitment, Williams said, but Alumni telephone solicitors will call them back each year.

The money contributed from the Phone-a-thon will go to the department specified by each alumni, and could include university residence halls and Greek living groups, Williams said.

Some married raises will be used to help to pay for future phone-a-thons.

"All of the money that's raised during our telecommunication programe goes back to benefit students," Williams said.

C-SPAN: No Borah broadcast without Jackson visit

By LEN ANDERSON
Staff Writer

The C-SPAN Cable Television Network has rejected a request for coverage of the Borah Symphony, leaving the Borah Foundation Committee without live television coverage of the event. "C-SPAN said that they had a meeting and we were dropped, but we're not," said Borah Foundation Committee Chairman Nicholas Gier. "If Jesse Jackson is coming, then they will reconsider." Gier also said that Jesse Jackson probably would not come to Boise because of his Wednesday visit to Spokane. "Maybe he will figure he has covered this area for a while," Gier said. "That might put a damper on our hopes for getting him." "Cocaine and conflict: Narcopolitcs in the Americas" will be the main topic for the two-night Borah Symposium event beginning March 27 in the SUB. KUID-TV is now considering running portions of the program on a delayed basis. A Borah retrospective is scheduled for March 21 in the College of Law Auditorium and will feature Bethine Church, wife of the late Sen. Frank Church and Boyd Martin, dean emeritus of the College of Letters and Science. A panel will open the first session, in which panelists will identify principles and channels involved in drug trafficking from Latin America and investigate past and present U.S. roles in drugs-for-arms.

Sitting in the panel will be Edgar Chavez, former Nicaraguan ambassador to the United Nations; Elaine Shannon, Time magazine Washington bureau chief; Fernando Cepeda, Columbian ambassador to the U.S.; James Van Wert of the U.S. State Department Bureau of International Narcotic Matters; and panel moderator Richard Craig, author of numerous narcotics articles.

During the second session, panelists will discuss drug trafficking as an ongoing part of official activities and examine some possible solutions. Panelists for the second panel will be Ethan Nadelman, Princeton University professor of politics; Peter Reith, director of Drug-organized Crime; The Economists of Mexico; L.C. Samuel Rouston, UI graduate; and panel moderator Bruce Snyder, coauthor of "The Limits to Negotiations."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY SUSAN. In honor of suffragist Susan B. Anthony's 169th birthday, the Women's Center is holding a Valentine's Day potluck at 12:30 p.m. today. The event includes free birthday cake and punch. Fiddle music will also be played in Anthony's honor. Anthony was born Feb. 15, 1820.

SISCA MEETS TONIGHT. Students in Support of Central America will meet tonight in the Borah Theater of the SUB. Discussion will include plans for the Mardi Gras Parade, SISCA newsletter and upcoming Central America Awareness Week. Check the SUB Information Desk for the meeting time and room number.

125 enrolled in UI Support Services

by Angela Schwegerl

Helping individuals achieve their academic goals while offering support and encouragement is a part of the services two University of Idaho programs offer students who are motivated, but may be unprepared for post-secondary education.

The federally-funded programs, Upward Bound and Student Support Services, are part of the National Trios Programs which offer an array of different services providing academic and personal assistance to students with limited financial resources. Both Upward Bound and Student Support Services deal directly with students from families with parents who may be unaware of the requirements for a college education. Therefore, the emotional support which is needed to succeed in college is sometimes not found at home.

"Our main purpose is to help students reach their academic goals," said Roxanne Root, academic/program coordinator for Student Support Services.

While both programs are concerned with students overcoming the barriers to higher education, each program has specific activities for its students.

Student Support Services provides academic assistance to college students who have limited income from a first-generation college family and/or are physically or learning disabled.

Because their location on campus is not that visible (PHH 902), it is sometimes challenging to get the word out about the program. The staff, however, has developed some successful techniques to reach students.

"We make sure professors and deans are aware of our program so when they come in contact with a student who fits the eligibility criteria, they refer the student to us. We also address various living groups, work with new student orientation and provide a video about our services," Root said.

Students gain assistance in Student Support Services, which began at the UI in 1980, first participating in an intake interview with a staff member. In addition to being eligible for the program, the student must show potential to succeed. Usually, staff members help the student determine what academic assistance he or she needs.

"Since we work with a small group of students, we can streamline our program to meet their individual needs," Goodwin said. "We provide a combination of academic management counseling, tutoring, workshops, guided study groups and advocacy.

Programs for the students are usually generated from their own needs about areas where they may need assistance. Past workshops have included math anxiety, employment preparation, improving test-taking skills and writing term papers.

The population using the programs ranges from the average young adult to non-traditional students.

Both Goodwin and Root believe once students gain motion based on success in the program, they become independent learners.

"Through our support we give students, we are in essence creating students who will learn strategies to succeed and develop positive thinking," Goodwin said.

Students are free to exit the program at any time and are encouraged to leave once they have benefited from the program's offerings, Goodwin said.

"We don't want to create dependency, but create independent learners," she said.

Those interested in the program are encouraged to come in for assistance early in their academic career to see if they qualify for the services, Root said.

The semester before enrollment is ideal, she said.

Some students come in after midterms and it is too late to help them substantially raise their grades for the semester, but Root said staff members are willing to help.

She said that knowing where the student is coming from helps foster the positive attitude needed for success.

"I think the best thing we've been able to offer our students is that we know what it is like to be unerved by college demands," Root said. "We don't have all the answers but share what has worked for us and others, along with encouragement and support," Root said.

Upward Bound, first funded by the UI in 1968, provides academic instruction during the summer and school months to high school and junior high school students in northern Idaho. According to Isabel Bond, director of the program, most but not all students are Native Americans.

"The program population, we work with are students that have or will have completed the eighth grade by the time they start the program," Bond said. "Students must be a good academic standing attending college and have a limited income."

During the academic year students receive instruction, tutoring and are monitored by counselors. In the summer, students are involved in an intense six-week study of the program which brings them to the UI campus.

The summer program provides the student with skills and motivation needed to succeed in college.

"During the summer, students enroll in the basic skill development program consisting of study skills, math, English and science," Bond said.

Students are also able to select course work in other areas, such as art or music. Participating in field trips is another option for students.

"We are trying to stimulate students' curiosity about post-secondary education and careers," Bond said.

Bond said she considers all course work essential but feels the students' attention is most pointed out not because students learn valuable techniques such as note-taking, memory and reading strategies, but because it incorporates skills with cultural concerns.

We teach some native languages and Indian issues and integrate materials that have an Indian focus," Bond said.

According to Bond, Upward Bound program director since 1975, the program is a worthwhile investment for the 60-70 students attending the summer session and the 70-80 students in the program during the academic year.

She said the entire summer program is designed for the students.

This letter is to all students who have or think they have the right to sleep with whomever they wish, even if that includes the provosts of their choice. They justify this by saying they’re “adults now.” However, if young people aren’t adults, you’ve just publicly lambasted all the undergraduates who feel that because you live in America you can decide for them what’s damn well please.
How long have you been at the University of Idaho? Obviously not long enough to have some respect for this century-old institution. And then you’ll be gone, like the thousands of others who’ve chosen to go to school here and then graduated. What people need to realize is that the U of I has been here for 100 years. Since 1905 — when the provost’s office — the university stays forever. The university has a reputation to uphold. See scandal: involving professors and students can tarnish that reputation in what shorter time than it takes to build one. Who gets hurt in these situations? Students. And what about a student face imprisonment, but they can leave after the damage has been done. The university cannot. I admit the commencement sex policy was perfectly good

Moralists call for disobedience

"Abortion is murder! Abortion is murder!" So the pro-lifers have been crying for the last 15 years. But why haven’t their actions backed up their words? If a human fetus has as much value as a four-year-old, then why haven’t pro-lifers taken more direct action to protect that unborn life?

During Nazi Germany’s holocaust, Christians such as Corrie Ten Boom hid Jews in their houses and searched for ways to free the oppressed. Before years in America, Christians like Charles Finney encouraged pastors to preach the overthrow of slavery. Both instances required Christians to break the law, to engage in civil disobedience. Corrie Ten Boom went to prison for it.

The renewed call in the last 15 years isChapter 17 of Finney’s Systematic Theology.

"In what cases are we bound to disobey human governments?"

1) We should obey when the thing required does not involve a violation of moral laws and obligation.

2) We must obey when the thing required has no moral value in itself; upon the principle that disobedience in this case is a lesser evil than resistance and revolution.

3) We must in all cases disobey when human legislation is contrary to moral law or violate your conscience.

In a world view, murder is near the top of evils. When it is something even murder, drastic measures should be pronunced to halt abortion, even at the cost of breaking civil law. An upsurge swept through Atlanta, Ga., when a group of pro-lifers decided to live by this principle of civil disobedi-ence. In peaceful demonstration, they upheld a higher moral law of saving lives. The lower law they broke: NO TRESPASSING.

Participants in Operation Rescue believe that unborn children have value as human beings — the way 1800s abolitionists and 1960s Martin Luther King believed that blacks have value as human beings, and Corrie Ten Boom believed that Jews have value as human beings.

In the last Days Magazine Melody Green, president of Americans Against Abortion, described the Operation Rescue of Oct. 4: "They taught people to sit peacefully and prayerfully in front of abortion clinics...” The police force to come to arrest them, they go on, which made possible for the officers to carry them away. Some things, like praying, may not have value in itself, but upon the principle that disobedience in this case is a lesser evil than resistance and revolution.

One group of people decided that as a way to break the law, they took the name of the group, Operation Rescue, and decided to break the law.

The rest is history. Sometimes, this kind of protest can provoke a violent reaction from those who want to keep abortion legal. In recent months, Operation Rescue protesters have been arrested for trespassing.

Some may find it ironic that Christians are using the tactics of the 1800s Civil Rights Movement, not something immediately connected with nonviolent Christianity. But these tactics are not new to Christians.

Remember the story of Daniel and the lions? He refused to stop praying even in the face of a government mandate. How about Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who refused to bow down to Nebuchadnezzar's golden statue? They were promptly thrown into an oven.

In a peaceful manner, the participants in Operation Rescue have been calling the government to national federation, refusing to bow down to Roe vs. Wade because they believe human life is too valuable to destroy or let perish.

What about those who find the words of the first Christian radical, the Apostle Peter (Acts 5:29), "We must obey God rather than man."

And that takes some guts.

PERSONALITIES

Don’t screw with wolves & nature

Editor

Over the past 13 years I have hiked, camped, fished and probable more than the average share of country in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming. I have read thousands of pages of material concerning wildlife and the general outdoors and belong to wildlife organizations such as the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation. But even this I still don’t feel that I am informed enough to sign a petition calling for the reintroduction of wolves into Yellowstone National Park.

The petition seems so cut-and-dried at first that most people would probably sign it without a second thought. I am usually all for the improvement of any man’s position on this earth, but in the world of today I am very leery about tampering with them with out clearing up some other points that should be thought on. One is that it is debatable whether there are wolves still in western Montana and the surrounding area. Another is that wolves are a very wide-ranging animal and if the reintroduction of wolves is introduced, will they stay within Yellowstone? If they move out of Yellowstone, will they learn to be human-dependent for prey such as sheep and cattle?

Another problem I have with this idea is that anytime the ranchers trying to fight it don’t have the time to access large numbers of people for petitions or signing or even the time to write stuff up. Wolves are probably the most Wilkinson persecuted animals of our day, but are they any less picture of innocence either. Study results of their animals vary 180 degrees. The American West is not like it was when the wolf first inhabited it. We may have to face the fact that humans have left their permanent mark on enough of the lower 48 so that the wolf can no longer live here in the way it’s accustomed to. This splendidly interesting and complex animal does not deserve some of the possible outcomes of re-introduction. If the effects of wolf re-introduction were残酷 and dried-like that petition then there would be no debate on it.

Personally, I believe that man has screwed around with nature enough without a lot of good results. Isn’t the good enough reason not to screw around with this animal by transplanting wolves without being sure of the consequences?

OP backcountry ski trip challenges participants

By KARA OLSON
Contributing Writer

A high-speed ski-touring trip highlighted the ASUI Outdoor Program’s annual backcountry ski trip to the Oregon Wallowas.

The run came after three days of advanced country skiing in the Eagle Cap Wilderness this past weekend.

“The trip out was a kamikaze run down a narrow path through the woods, and there were a few places to bail out,” said Jon Pascale, a Wildland Recreation Management graduate student.

Graduate student Randy Hollander said the ski run was the wildest part of the tour.

“Even though the run marked the ending of the trip, I found myself anticipating it the whole weekend,” said Hollander.

Hairpin turns on icy snow proved challenging to those who participated. However, Ben Reingold, a Wildland Recreation Management student, found the challenge enjoyable and would definitely ski the run again.

The ten-member group started their journey with a six-mile, 3,000-foot mountain climb. Each member carried a full pack of gear. At the end of the trip students arrived at Silver Tip Lodge, a wood-heated log cabin surrounded by mountainous terrain.

Saturday part of the group enjoyed a 360-degree view of the Eagle Cap Wilderness when they climbed the 10,000-foot rim of Pete’s Peak.

“The view was spectacular,” Hollander said. “I wish I could live there and have my own little bit of paradise.”

Despite the difficulty of the trip, ASUI Outdoor Program Coordinator Mike Beiser said the participants were strong and contributed to the overall success of the trip.

Beiser said that the members learned a lot about themselves from the challenging experience.

“Through this challenge each person learned by sharing their own skills and abilities,” Beiser said.

The Outdoor Program offers both beginning and introductory trips, along with more challenging trips for advanced skiers.

The Outdoor Program has reserved the Silver Tip Lodge for similar backcountry skiing trips during this year’s spring break. Those interested should contact the Outdoor Program at 885-6810 or visit the office located in the SUB basement.

The spring skiing should be the best skiing in years,” said Beiser.

Montana State and Montana share one on the Vandals’ hit at a Big Sky Championship after splitting last week’s games against Northern Arizona and Nevada-Reno.

The Vandals lost for only the fourth time this season on a last-second three-point shot from Nevada-Reno’s Matt Williams, moving their overall record to 19-4 and 9-2 in Big Sky play.

Saturday’s loss ended Idaho’s nine-game winning streak and left them a half-game ahead of Boise State at 8-2 and one game ahead of Montana at 8-3.

Idaho will meet the Montana State Bobcats Thursday as they close their conference schedule with four of their last five games in the Kibbie Dome.

The Bobcats are lead by Alane Stephens, a 5-10 junior guard who averages 19.7 points, 4.1 rebounds and 4.1 assists per game.

The Bobcats beat Montana State on the road 76-64 earlier this season.

The Bobcats, 10-12 overall and 3-8 in conference play, are fighting for the sixth and final spot in the Big Sky Conference Championships March 9-11.

Montana will be the Vandals’ toughest matchup. The Grizzlies beat Idaho 62-54 in overtime after 5 UI turned over the ball with 27 seconds left in regulation and was then outscored 13-5 in overtime.

The Vandals hit just 22 shots in the game to finish with a season low 39.7 percent.

Montana sits on a 16-8 overall record heading into Thursday’s game at Eastern Washington.

Centier Wayne Tinkle leads the Grizzlies, averaging 16.9 points and 8.8 rebounds per game. C.C. McGowan adds 12.0 points and 3.8 rebounds, while forward Osie Young averages 8.0 points and 6.9 rebounds per game.

The Bobcats have 5.5 assists per game while making 54 percent of his shots.

UI will be looking for tough shots from their impressive inside tandem of Raymond Brown, Riley Tinkle and Alane Stephens.

Brown continued his string of outstanding performances for UI.

In case you haven’t noticed, the Vandals have a new basketball star named Riley Smith.

But how can one not notice a 6-11, 235-pound player who is the second-highest scorer for the Vandals, has been named Big Sky Player of the Week the last two weeks, won recently named Big Sky Player of the Month for January.

While these statistics may seem impressive, they don’t seem to be enough for Smith, who still wants to improve.

“If I’m improving all the time, and I feel I should keep on improving to stay satisfied,” Smith remarked.

UI's Choate-Deeds runs to break track records

By GREG NUNES

Unfortunately, Caryn Choate-Deeds will no longer be running for the University of Idaho women's track team following this season.

A senior, Choate-Deeds is in her final year of eligibility. For many associated with the UI track program, the departure of Choate-Deeds will be a difficult one. She is one of the finest sprinters the school has ever had.

Choate-Deeds holds UI outdoor records in the 100 meters with a 12.11 mark and in the 200 meters with a 24.97 time. She is the 150-meter Big Sky Conference champion and was the lead-off leg for the record-setting 400-meter relay team which clocked in at 47.77 seconds.

The Mark Morris High School graduate from Longview, Wash. has worked hard to become a record-setting sprinter.

With training that begins every year in September and a season that runs into March, burnout is a real possibility.

For Choate-Deeds, faster times are necessary to keep the sport fun.

"I don't think I could continue running if my times didn't improve since high school," Choate-Deeds said. "Every year I get a little quicker."

Choate-Deeds' work ethics have helped her improve her times.

"She definitely does work hard," said UI Track Coach Scott Lorek. "She has a real appropriate attitude towards competition and herself."

Lorek is also pleased with what Choate-Deeds has achieved over the years.

"She has really improved every year," Lorek said. "The ones that are really successful look forward to competition and to improve themselves."

Training for meets begins early in the week with sprints and weightlifting. As a short-distance runner, Choate-Deeds doesn't have to run as much during practices as the long-distance runners.

"Sprinters are supposedly the lazy ones," she said.

Choate-Deeds, a general education major, can hardly be considered a "lazy one" with the numbers she has posted.

With the indoor season under way, Choate-Deeds is currently running in the 55 meter every, in which she holds the school record at 7.28 seconds. Showing she is still in sprint form, Choate-Deeds placed first with a 7.34 in last Saturday's Cavanaugh Indoor Meet at the Kibbie Dome.

Choate-Deeds also ran in the 300 meter event in Saturday's meet, placing first with a time of 35.86.

During her final year, Choate-Deeds will strive to place in the top three in all her events and break the 12-second barrier in the 100.

If she continues to improve like she has over the years, none of her goals will be unattainable.

EVERYONE TALKS ABOUT CHANGING THE WORLD. THIS YEAR 3750 PEOPLE WILL ACTUALLY DO IT.

Not everyone is cut out to change the world. After all, it takes education, skills and a spare two years. Also a willingness to work. Hard.

This year, 3,750 Americans will join the Peace Corps to do just that. They'll do things like build roads, plant forests and crops, teach English, develop small businesses, train community health workers, or even coach basketball. However, what they'll be doing isn't half as important as the fact that they'll be changing a little piece of the world... for the better.

And when they return, these 3,750 Americans will find that experience doing hard work will have another benefit. It's exactly what their employers are looking for.

So, give the Peace Corps your next two years. And while you're out changing the world, you'll also be making a place in it for yourself.

Women split weekend matchups
Travel to Boise State Thursday to meet Lady Broncos

The University of Idaho Lady Vandals hit the road this week as they take on Boise State in a crucial matchup Thursday.

After their 58-50 win against Montana State Friday night in the Kibbie Dome, the Lady Vandals saw their home-game winning streak end at nine with a 64-63 loss against the Montana Grizzlies Saturday night.

The loss to the Lady Griz was Idaho's lowest offensive point total of the season, and UI's scoring leader, Chris Van Velt, was held to just 10 points.

Montana's victory extended their winning streak to 14 games and an undefeated conference record.

Idaho remains in the Big Sky playoff chase at 8-4 and 16-9 overall, after taking last weekend off from conference action. Boise State is currently 15-6 overall and second in the BSC with an 8-2 mark.

The Vandals are now 19-4 overall and 9-2 in conference and will lead the Big Sky despite their loss to Nevada-Reno last Saturday. Will they go on to win the conference, or will the loss upset their momentum? According to Smith, the Vandals will still be the conference favorites.

"We'll win it. Despite the loss, we'll win it," Smith said. When all is said and done, where is Riley Smith heading after college? This is a question he approaches realistically. He would like to continue playing basketball.

"If I keep on improving, hopefully I'll make the NBA, but so does everybody," Smith said.

He has a definite chance to go somewhere after college, whether it be in a European league or the NBA. Riley is very realistic; he has the desire," Davis said.

But that is the future. Right now Smith is still concerned with the Vandals and his remaining playing time. The next year-and-a-half promises great things for the Vandals when Smith takes UI.

"If I win on Montana State in the Kibbie Dome on Thursday, I'll take on Boise State in the Kibbie Dome Friday for the first game of the conference.

In his last four Vandals games and has scored in double figures in the last six contests. UI guard Lorenzo Ness is currently averaging 5.8 assists and is one of Pacific Northwest's leading scorers with 13 assists in his last four games, which ranks eighth in the Vandals' single-season list.

Head Coach Kermit Davis said of the conference race, "We're now in first place, with four of our last five at home. To me, we still control our own destiny. We just have to get ourselves ready and come back and play.

Both Thursday's and Saturday's games begin at 7:30 in the Kibbie Dome.

Parade committee seeks color, noise

By DENA BANDAZAN
Staff Writer

What does it take to pull a parade together?
It takes a lot of phone calls, dependable volunteers and subcommittees. The Mardi Gras parade committee is composed of 52 community members and university students who have been working to coordinate the parade.

"Preliminary planning for the parade was done by the Mardi Gras board of directors. The parade committee has been working really hard for the last month. We started the meetings last this year so people wouldn't get burned out," said Judy Thompson, co-chairperson of the committee.

"The technical details are taken care of by the sub-committees. I see to it that people on those committees get what they need," said Steve Elgar, co-chairperson of the committee.

"We have thousands of phone calls to get the whole thing going," Elgar said. "People in the community are very supportive as far as loaning and donating supplies goes.

One detail man is Dave McGraw, who is in charge of registering entrants and lining up entries. Entrants will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis.

Other committees have been formed for decorations, clean-up, crowd control, float moving, judging, selection, and set-up, which takes care of the parade's electrical and video needs.

"The most important job I was doing was calling all the people who participated in the parade last year and convincing them to be in it again, as well as recruiting new entrants," Elgar said.

This year, as an incentive to get more people involved, cash awards will be given to the best living group entries. The top groups from WSU and UI will receive $100.

Elgar predicts that the number of entrants will depend on the weather. "There will be more processions this year from Moscow. It has been a couple of years since the Moscow High School had a float," he said.

Music will be added to the parade, either with a live broadcast by KUCI,
"We are asking people to bring their own music to the parade," Elgar said.

Support from the community encompasses local businesses and campus organizations. Participating are also listed on Mardi Gras posters and in the program.

"Hopefully it will be a benefit for them," Buchanan said. "I'm trying to give them a fair deal."

According to Buchanan, many of the sponsors are interested in future services to the community. For example, several local hotels will house band members.

"I don't like doing this fundraising," I like to just see bands," Buchanan said. "But the reputation of Mardi Gras has made it easier."

The projected 1989 budget is $5,000, up from $3,000 last year. Mardi Gras is still underwriting costs from previous years, however.

Examples of approximated increases in spending include:

Expense 1988 1989
Ball $2,500 $4,000
Bands $5,450 $9,650
7-Sirts $578 $1,200

Swash-buckle into community theater’s production of Pirates

By M.L. GARLAND

It seems appropriate that during Moscow’s weekend of fanciful happenings a lively band of pirates should land and put the rest of the folks in folk capers. The Pirates of Penzance, a Gilbert and Sullivan musical, portrays the kinds of derring-do adventures of undersea-hearted pirates on the high seas. The show will be presented by the Moscow Community Theater Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. and at 2 p.m. Sunday in the historic Ridenbaugh High School Auditorium. And according to Director Edmund Chavez, the show is family-oriented. "There’s a great deal of movement and action that even the youngest child would enjoy,” Chavez said. “It’s just a lot of fun.”

"There’s a great deal of movement and action that even the youngest child would enjoy. It’s just a lot of fun." — Edmund Chavez Tumbling, rapidly-fired patter songs made famous by Danny Kaye are prevalent in Piraten along with operatic vibrato. The sets contain a cartoonesque appeal adding to the production’s frolickical mood. An opening scene of boats traveling across the waters prepares the audience for Chavez’s approach to the musical.

Familiar faces on campus such as Roger Wallins, associate dean of graduate studies, Judy Wal-

Chavez encourages Mardi Gras ball-goers to take in a performance before the dance. The show runs approximately one hour and 40 minutes. Tickets for Pirates are available at downtown banks or at the door.

Ridenbaugh looks for success in California

By DENA BANDAZAN
Staff Writer

It's all a Game for Ridenbaugh. That's the name of the album that the band is working on right now. Really, it isn't much of a game at all. It is a lot of hard work.

"We know we have something good; otherwise we'd get out," said Scott Bledsoe, Ridenbaugh's lead singer and keyboardist.

About one-third of the music on the band's upcoming album will be older music that their Moscow followers will remember. The rest will be new music, most of which is already written, Bledsoe said.

The album remains unsigned by a record company, but the band is not discouraged.

"Nobody wants to sign anybody right now in Los Angeles. You have to have a huge following or a really unique sound. We don't have a huge following here because L.A. is predominantly a heavy metal crowd right now," Bledsoe said.

Bledsoe said that although Ridenbaugh performs occasionally, the band's main task is to get its name known.

Because of all the competition in L.A., right now, bands have to pay about $300 per gig, Bledsoe said.

"We're playing the political game right now, going to parties and meeting people," Bledsoe said.

The band received encouraging news from several record companies that wanted to buy all of its music.

"We've turned all of those offers down. But they are a good sign," Bledsoe said.

The album, It's All a Game, will be completed in two years or less.

"We are raising the money to produce this album, and we have a two-year budget. Unless we get signed before that, which is a definite possibility, the record will be done in two years," Bledsoe said.

Band members Bledsoe, Tom Greens, Russ Cary and "Loutie the Drummer" say they cannot wait to perform for their Idaho fans again, but they do not know when they will be able to make the trip.

"We really miss Moscow, but what we're doing is the best thing for the band right now, playing on free studio time," Bledsoe said.

Ridenbaugh is producing another newsletter. Those who would like to receive news about the band should write to: Ridenbaugh, 1527 Venice Boulevard, Venice, CA 90291.

Give of your heart, not wallet

Analysis by JILL CHRISTINE BECK

Who would have thought that a holiday as innocent as Valentine's Day could prove to be such a terrorism?

Designed to be a day to let your significant other know how much you care, Valentine's Day is really no more than a well-organized marketing scheme, eating at the pocket books of innocent people too in love to figure out what's going on.

Well, wake up and smell the chocolate-covered cherries!

There are many things more romantic than roses or a meaningless ring for those who are short on cash.

What about dinner in the Blue Bucket? Bring some candles, a nice table cloth and something good to eat. (Either something you've cooked yourself, or buy something at Joe's)

Cook a special meal together. This is a good way to spend time together. Make it a shared project, from planning and shopping to cooking and eating. Personality traits really come out in the kitchen, you will probably learn something about each other.

Give a unique gift. You don't have to send roses. On Valentine's Day. Carnations or daisies or a mixed bouquet of flowers can be just as romantic, cheaper and last longer. And don't forget fun presents like ice cream cakes, heart-shaped cookies or a balloon bouquet.

Write a poem or make a card. Homemade gifts show you care and that you are willing to spend not just money, but time on your Valentine.

With a little imagination, you can make Valentine's Day wonderful for you both, without breaking the bank.
