UI library on its way to $11.6 million expansion

By SHERRY DEAL, News Editor

The Permanent Building Fund Advisory Council has recommended $11.6 million for an expansion of the University of Idaho library and improvements to other campus structures and systems. The recommendation will now go to Gov. Cecil Andrus, who will send it to the Idaho Legislature to be either approved or disapproved.

"We are basically out of new power sources."

— Joanne Reece, Faculty Parking Director

approving ride at the next legislative session in January.

About $11.6 million of the allotted money is to be used for the library. According to Facility Planning Director Joanne Reece, the library expansion project has been on the university's capital budget request sheet for the longest amount of time and has finally worked its way to the top of the building board's list.

Roece said the library expansion will create more room for library collections, student study space, and staff, which has more than doubled within the last few years.

The site for the library expansion is improvements to the primary electrical distribution system and campus asbestos removal.

The electrical system improvements are necessary if the system is to meet campus needs in the future.

"We are basically out of new power sources," she said.

The asbestos removal, which Reece called a sizable problem on the UI campus, will take place in one section of the campus heating plant. The removal of all the asbestos on campus would be extremely costly.

"It's all over campus," she said.

White discusses minimum wage bill with RHA

By BETTIE PETTIBONE, Staff Writer

University students are the key to raising the minimum wage in Idaho, according to state Rep. Eugene White. White, who spoke at Monday night's Associated Student Union meeting, said college students can issue a statement to legislators as a whole and write to their representatives about increasing the state minimum wage.

"I have to come here and talk to you because others can't afford to be here," said White, referring to the large number of low minimum wage minimum earners in the state. "We have to generate enough support to raise Idaho's minimum wage. The Legislature needs to hear from young people, and college campuses are the only pockets that exist."

Idaho's current minimum wage is $2.30, which is more than $1 under the national wage. Adjusted for inflation, White said this would equal $1.12. The last state minimum wage increase was in 1977. White wants to pass a law that will raise the wage to $4.25 statewide.

"It's institutionalized slavery," White said of the current minimum wage. "I admire a person who takes the time to be in a public office for nothing, but a person shouldn't have to work for nothing."

White has made several attempts to raise the minimum wage, but has run dead ends in the state Legislature. His proposal to increase the amount to $3 did not even reach the House floor.

"Nobody could be so cruel as to make someone work for less than three dollars an hour," White said.

University of Idaho Political Concern Board Chairman Bill Broadhead said it seems someone from the Legislature is finally standing up for those who cannot stand up for themselves.

"With active student involvement, a higher minimum wage could be a reality," Broadhead said.

"Gino shows a lot of courage in taking this fight on. I wish him the best of luck, and I have my support.

White said it will take a great deal of effort to get the wage law out of committee and onto the floor. He hopes to propose the bill to the Legislature in December.

In other RHA news, ASUI Sen. Julie McCoy spoke about a proposed non-alcoholic, underage dance club in downtown Moscow.

"McKay, who is working with Brad Cuddy on the project, said the club would not require a new fee increase for UI students.

State funding would not be needed, and the club would be self-sustaining.

"We're looking at a $10,000 to $20,000," McCoy said. "It would be an ASUI money loss. We'd know within a couple of months after it opened if we'd lose money. I don't think we'd lose money."

McCoy said an admission fee of about $2 would be charged for UI students with ID, and the cost for WSU students would be slightly higher.

"They and Cuddy are still looking for a location, and are dealing with Moscow."

We are seriously considering a site across from the Cordon Lounge.

All the money generated would be put back into the club.

Rep. White speaks on ASUI issues

The "staunch supporter of student rights," Rep. Eugene "Gino" White, (D-Cataldo) referred to his alma mater Monday to discuss issues and legislation affecting students.

"My background and personal perspective on what education should be in Idaho allows me to speak more actively with the students than say the administration or the State Board of Education," White said.

A former ASUI president (85) and ASUI lobbyist, White said he can still identify with students at the University of Idaho.

"Being younger, I share the concerns of students, and just having gone through the system, I haven't forgotten any of the obstacles a student has in getting an education," he said.

"It's high on my priority list." Concerning the possible limitation on using student fees for tuition, White said he has urged ASUI President Tina Kagi to pursue this action. Citing that the Legislature has constantly raised student fees because of so many other situations, White said our current Idaho surplus provides a fortunate opportunity.

"University President Coe last year really went over the student fees issue," White said. "When he said that those fees would go into faculty salaries," he said, "if that goes unamended for the fifth consecutive year, the Legislature has constantly raised student fees because of so many other situations. White said we current Idaho surplus provides a fortunate opportunity.

Student reps. visit Spokane campuses

Food service evaluated
by BETH PETTIBON Staff Writer

Representatives from the University and UI Food Service Committee and student managers from University Dining Services at Marriott took a field trip to Spokane to get a first-hand look at the Marriott services offered on the Gonzaga University and Whitworth College campuses.

Led by Resident Dining Director Joe Schneckenberger, nine students were given a tour of both campuses and ate lunch at Gonzaga.

Schneckenberger said the objective of the field trip was to give the students a chance to see other two food services and compare them to UI’s food service.

The first stop was Gonzaga, where students ate lunch in the newly renovated cafeteria and toured the snack bar and a second cafeteria.

Gonzaga’s Director of Food Services Paul Konomakos, who led the students through a tour of the campus and the cafeterias, told the UI student representatives that Gonzaga has one of the most restrictive meal programs of all the colleges and universities across the country. He also said that meal times are limited. Gonzaga students are allowed just one hour for lunch during the week.

“I don’t think we realize how fortunate we are until we see the operations of other schools.”

— Elwood Renton

“The food tastes the same (as UI), but the portions at Gonzaga are bigger,” said Lara MacConnell, a food service committee representative from Wheel Sweet Hall. “There are a lot of things we (UI) need to do.”

Scott Haney, a representative from Graham Hall, said that the food line area at Gonzaga were overcrowded and difficult to maneuver in.

“There’s so much in one small area, it got clustered,” Haney said. “The service is too rigid. They could use more flexibility.”

The student representatives later visited Whitworth, where they were dismayed at the high cost of the meal plan in comparison to UI’s. At Whitworth a dinner meal plan costs $1200, while at UI the same meal plan is $696.

Jim O’Brien, director of Whitworth’s food service, said the school has focused more on the dining than on the food.

“When you visit our place, you’re basically coming back to the Stone Age,” O’Brien said. “Most of the things here haven’t changed in quite a while.”

Although O’Brien is trying to convince Whitworth’s administration to make changes in the cafeteria, the process is slow. He said that for the amount the students are spending for meals, the food service could provide them with many other options.

“I can’t believe students are still going through these lines and not complaining,” O’Brien said. “This (the food selection) is boring.”

Students get chance to question candidates

By KARA GARTEN News Assistant

Students will get their chance to drill candidates about campus issues like the cooperative summer Friday Thursday night.

Bill Bradfield, Political Concern Board chairman and forum moderator, said the forum could cause some flame wars because of the many volatile issues confronting this year’s candidates.

von on the usage of student funds.

“I hope you can’t do two things: one, take your time to defend yourself, and on the other hand the student’s ability to defend themselves and, on the other hand the state’s ability to defend itself,” he said. “Students are people, too.”

While spoke at several living groups Monday night about his proposed minimum wage legislation.

“There are some serious issues in this campaign,” Bradfield said. “This will be an excellent opportunity for the students to confront the candidates. I would like to throw things out there and let them go at it.”

The Political Concern Board will prepare the questions for the formal part of the debate, and then the audience will be allowed to ask questions. University of Idaho radio station KUID will carry the debate live, and call-in questions will also be accepted.

Candidate running for UI Senate offices will debate first, followed by a separate debate for presidential and vice presidential candidates.

The forum is scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday in the Administration Building Auditorium. It is open to the public, and students are encouraged to attend.

Direct correlation between increase in minimum wage and increase in job creation was a theme of the debate. Washington state’s and Oregon’s minimum wage of $5.75, is the work an exodus of low minimum wage earners in Idaho,” White said.

Business incubator plans underway

BY BETH BARCLAY
Staff Writer

The Moscow Business Incubator project is off the ground due to the work of Bill Anderson, director of the Economic Development Council, Congressman Larry Craig, Moscow Mayor Cary Scott and University of Idaho Financial Vice President Joseph Geiger.

The project was caught up in red tape in the Department of Commerce and was in danger of never reaching completion, but a ceremony celebrating its integration into the Moscow community will be held Friday.

The incubator is a project designed to help the area's small businesses get started. Several small businesses can be housed in one building to save on overhead. These businesses also share resources, such as a secretary, which the project provides. The extra capital can then be put back into the business.

UI CEREMONY HONORS VETERANS

In a ceremony scheduled for Friday, members of the University of Idaho Veterans Club will remember their comrades-in-arms.

At 11 a.m., a University Club color guard will approach the flagpole in front of the Administration Building, hoist the colors, and render a salute as a bugler plays "Taps."

The flag-raising is meant as a tribute and a symbol for all veterans who have served, fell or never came back," said Veterans Club President Joe Martin.

The color guard is comprised of four UI student-veterans, each representing a different branch of the armed forces. The public is welcome to attend.

NEWSBREAK

SOVIETS MEET MIDDLE AMERICA

Four Soviet citizens are spending six days in Moscow as part of the Soviets Meet Middle America program sponsored by the Center for U.S.-U.S.S.R. Initiatives. The Soviets arrive today and will be here until Saturday.

The Soviets are working as citizen diplomats to create permanent channels of citizen communication and cooperation that will enhance official diplomacy between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The guests will be staying with host families during their visit. Tours, meetings, public forums and other activities have been scheduled. The Soviets will attend Rotary, Kiwanis and Moscow City Council meetings and tour local schools. They will be on the campus Thursday for a Lunch and Learn Seminar at 12:30 p.m. in UCC Room 110.

The UI International Trade and Development office is coordinating the visit. For more information, contact Gena Wray or Ron Lawrence at the ITAD office.

IDAHOST TRAINING OFFERED AT UI

Idaho Host, a program to prepare "front line" personnel to work with Idaho visitors and residents during Idaho's centennial and beyond, will be held Wednesday from 5 p.m. - 10:30 p.m. at the University of Idaho College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences.

The cafeteria does not provide any breakfast meals or any sort of deli bar, both of which are available daily at UI's Wallace Cafeteria.

Loretta Dickerson, a food service committee representative from Campbell Hall, said that she was pleased with the UI service, but that some areas could be improved.

"I have a lot of things today that the UI doesn't have to deal with, but at the same time there are still some things that can be improved," Dickerson said.

Other food service committee representatives were more appreciative of UI's dining services after the field trip.

"I don't think we realize how fortunate we are until we see the operations of other schools," said Elwood Rasmussen, a representative from Ustream Hall.

UI's Food Service Committee was initially formed to allow students to air their complaints to the University Dining Services. "It started out as a gripe session and has turned into a productive meeting," McCannell said.

"It does serve as a good communication base between the cafeteria and the students," Haney said.

The committee is planning to visit the Boise State University campus next semester.

PCB chairman Bill Broadhead said they may bring supporters to speak on their behalf if they deem it necessary.

The names of the candidates have been included in the 1989 General Election Official Candidates List, although Broadhead is treating their petitions as invalid.

"On the benefit of the doubt, I released their names on the candidates list," Broadhead said. "I am initially treating their petitions as invalid, but I can be overridden by the board."
Lack of wage is a lack of incentive

I imagine a single parent with two children living in Idaho. If this parent is not working, she/she is eligible for food stamps, welfare and Medicaid. If the parent works for minimum wage full time, he/she would lose the health coverage for the children while only earning 70 percent of what is considered the poverty level.

There isn’t much incentive to work for minimum wage in Idaho. Because Idaho’s minimum wage is $2.30 an hour, a person working full time and earning this wage would require 13 months’ salary to pay for a one-week hospital visit.

This was part of the message Rep. Eugene White (D-Cataldo) delivered to students at the Argonaut last night. White is spearheading the much-needed effort to increase Idaho’s minimum wage.

In the last two years, White has introduced five bills to raise the minimum wage. Despite White’s efforts, the bills died in committee. Still, he is undaunted.

“I’m going back this year with a substantially higher number and a stronger minimum wage bill that I can hopefully get enough public support for to get it through the legislative process,” White said.

White understands the embarrassing and painful state of minimum wage in Idaho. Ranking 41st in minimum wage and 43rd in per capita income, Idaho makes a poor showing next to the neighboring states of Washington and Oregon, whose minimum wage stands at $4.25. Idaho’s minimum wage of $2.30 an hour hasn’t increased since 1977. Adjusted for inflation, this only amounts to $1.13. Idaho’s minimum wage is even below the $3.35 federal minimum wage.

The result of this is that 129,000 people in Idaho live below the poverty level and approximately one-fifth of the state’s population is without health coverage.

Although the need for a higher minimum wage should be recognized by Ida-hoans out of a sense of fairness (and — heaven forbid — good will), it should also be noted that a higher wage is a more sensible option. White notes that Idaho farmers have been losing low-income workers to Washington and Oregon. An increase in Idaho’s minimum wage would reduce such an exodus. What’s more, a 1982 report indicated that 40 percent of high ability high school students left the state to gain their education elsewhere. Higher minimum wages in other states make other states’ colleges more attractive.

End this embarrassing situation. Contact your local representative or senator and stress that the minimum wage needs to be raised. The need is a moral as well as an economic one.

College students, especially, should be concerned. With the cost of college education skyrocketing, a higher minimum wage would make that cost less burdensome.

Imagine a UI student with money in his pocket...

Letter to the Editor

Grace period

Editor: Over the past two months, the new UI president has been getting to know the people, policies and politics of this institution. Because any leadership position has a learning period within it, the new leader’s adjustment process becomes a matter of public interest.

Naturally, Argonaut journalists have eagerly brought to our attention the range of our new president’s activities, from speeches before the State Board of Education to press conferences on the student’s newspaper. However, we see a problem with the manner of the reporting.

On a grander scale, there is an understated “honeymoon” of 100 days when the national media pull back from its favorite president—time, president-bashing—and allows our nation’s chief executive to settle in. In business, most corporations give new employees a probation period of six months or a year to learn the ropes, make mistakes and, more importantly, learn how to correct them. For foreign policy makers, who are adjusting to changes in language, climate and clothing, as well as to the deeper problems of new ways of thinking and even perceiving, the adaptation period seems to extend to the end of the first semester of study, sometimes longer.

President Zinser is in the process of making all of these adjustments. She is our chief executive, a new employee, and, in a very real way, a person experiencing a new culture with foreign customs and ways of thinking. Why, then, is the Argonaut reporter, particularly the editorial writers, pouring on every example of her lack of familiarity with the system? Not only is she new to the job, but her predecessor has flown the coop and is readily available for consultation. If she wants to show the flavor of the new Argonaut staffers or ASUI senators, the cries of “That’s not fair!” would be vibrating from Sandpoint to Twin Falls.

You reporters will be here a few years, and then you’ll go out into the Big Bad World to become new employees yourselves, perhaps even out of the state. Surely you’d appreciate a “grace period.”

Letter to the Editor

Argonaut Election Letter Policy

The Argonaut publishes two letters endorsing each candidate. After the two-letter restriction, letters will be published only if all candidates in that race have had their allotment. Candidates will be allowed to endorse or be endorsed against them in the Nov. 14 Argonaut, if space permits. This is not, however, intended as a forum to make accusations against other candidates or to urge constituents to vote for certain candidates. Letters to the editor will be accepted until noon on the day prior to publication. They must be limited to 300 words in length, typed and double-spaced. Shorer letters have priority and are likely to require less editing for length.

Letters must be signed and include the writer’s name, address, phone number, and student identification number or driver’s license number. For multiple-authored letters, the above information will be required for each writer. Proof of identity will be required for many. Letters will be subject to editing. Letters received by mail will not be returned unless confirmation of authorship is made. Names of writers will not be withheld.

Letters may be edited for length, mechanical errors and spelling errors. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to publish any letter.

The above rules are intended to give all candidates a fair opportunity to state their positions.

Poster problem

Editor:
My main concern about the issue brought up in my memo was not whether Lynn Major had campaign material taken down on the UCC. I am convinced that the only campaign material she had taken down was hers and Steve Smart's. What bothered me is that she knew that campaign material was going to be removed and when it was going to be removed, and she did nothing to inform other candidates or the proper authorities. Instead she chose to take advantage of the knowledge of this crime for her own personal gain.
Lynn Major knew that the posters were going to be removed from the UCC and when it was going to take place. It was her obligation to inform the other candidates and the proper authorities. She chose not to.

Cheap thrill irresponsible

Editor:
On Saturday, Oct. 28 at 1:45 a.m. and Nov. 2, at approximately 12:01 a.m. the fire alarm was pulled at Willis Sweet Hall. I would like to address the person(s) who think that pulling fire alarms is cheap entertainment. Hey, if you get turned on by making female students get up all hours the night to stand outside in freezing temperatures (below 32 degrees this week), then you have a sick mind — besides you certainly can't see the smoke since we wear our coats. You would be better off buying Pepto Bismol, then the only person you'd effect would be yourself.
Your little "thrill" costs the Moscow Fire Dept. a lot of time and money. Did you know that the fire department is a volunteer fire department? They have one major fundraiser a year, the fireman's ball. Do you really think they can afford to make unnecessary trips to campus? Then again, maybe you got excited watching the red fire truck pull up to the dorms. However, as a result of your childish actions, if a real fire alarm occurs, dorm residents will be in danger, believing the alarm to be another false alarm, as well as the firemen, who seem to spend one-fourth of their time on campus this fall.
Finally, I would like to say that if a resident in our dorm, which is locked after 11 p.m., is aiding someone else to pull the alarm or pulling the fire alarm herself, then you are, in my opinion, lower than stinking sewer slime. And if I see anyone pulling an alarm, I won't hesitate to turn in that person. You are in college now, so act like you are responsible enough to be here.

Vandals qualify for playoffs in 47-31 win over ISU

By ERIC ELO Staff Writer

The Vandals are in! For the fifth straight year, UI University of Idaho football team, has qualified for the Division I-AA playoffs, after defeating Idaho State University 47-31 Saturday night.

With the victory, UI clinched at least a tie for the Big Sky Conference title. After Boise State University lost to the University of Nevada-Reno Saturday, the University of Montana became the sole team that can tie UI for the league title. The Vandals automatically receive the I-AA playoff berth since they defeated Montana earlier in the season.

The Vandals are now 7-0 in the league and 8-2 overall and will "play their last game at home No. 5 against arch-rival Boise State University. With a victory over PSU, the Vandals can wrap up their third consecutive conference title, establish a league record 15 consecutive conference wins, and defeat BSU for the eighth straight year.

Despite the final score, PSU provided a challenge for the Vandals. Thanks to a record-setting performance by Bengal quarterback Jason Whitmer, the Bengals were as close as 20-15 in the second quarter. Although Whitmer set a 1-AA record for the most completions in a half with 27, the Vandals refused to be denied. The Vandals' scoring barrage began with a 43-yard touchdown pass from John Friesz to Lee Allen. Devin Paire followed with a 1-yard touchdown plunge, and Allen caught a five-yard pass to make the score 20-3 with 1:26 left in the first quarter. After an PSU field goal in the second quarter cut the Vandals lead to five, Friesz hit Allen on a quick-out pattern that eventually resulted in a 69-yard touchdown play and gave UI a 25-13 lead.

Before halftime, the Vandals padded their lead to 33-15 with a one-yard run by Bruce Harris. During the second half, the Vandals scored two more touchdowns, a two-yard pass by Paire and a 12-yard pass from Friesz to Casey Dunn. The Vandals defense stifled in the second half and was led by Damon Taggart with 20 tackles and Brian Smith, who added 15. The 31 points allowed by the Vandals defense is somewhat misleading, as BSU's final touchdown came with 14 seconds left in the game.

Friesz again passed for more than 300 yards, as he hit on 20 of 39 passes for 381 yards, one interception, and four touchdowns. The Vandals receiving trio of Dunn, Allen and David Jackson combined for 19 receptions and 372 yards.

UI qualified for the I-AA playoffs, but they have unfinished business within the conference, as BSU looms in the distance. For many players, the season would be incomplete without a victory over the Broncos.

"It doesn't get any better than this except when we beat Boise State," Dunn said after the ISU game.

"The playoffs, to me, is second," Friesz said. "I wanted to win the Big Sky. We've got a share of it, but we want it outright."

Playoff hopes die as Lady Vandals drop two

By AMY WILLIAMS

The Lady Vandals' hopes of postseason play came to an end this weekend as they fell to Montana State University Friday and the University of Montana Saturday.

Bobcat Stephanie Nowicki became the first player in Montana State history to record 300 kills and 300 digs in one season, as she and her team beat the Lady Vandals 4-2, 15-11, 6-15, 15-10 and 15-8.

"They served very well," said University of Idaho Head Coach Tom Hilbert. "They served the ball in a way that we couldn't get out passing off. It messed up our tempo."

Nowicki recorded 22 kills, three assists, 17 digs, and had a hitting percentage of .365. MSU also shut down the Lady Vandals with good defense.

"Our side-outs were few, we missed too many serves, and our middle hitters were stopped," Hilbert said.

Despite the loss, UI's Karen Thompson showed her talent with 31 kills, one assist, 16 digs, three blocks and a .333 percentage. "She did a good job in the middle," Hilbert said. "She plays hard."

Hilbert said he felt the Lady Vandals turned around Saturday night when they faced the Montana Grizzlies. Thompson recorded 27 kills, 21 digs, five blocks, five serving aces, and had a hitting percentage of .300.

It was not enough to stop the 14-3 Grizzlies, however, as the Lady Vandals were defeated 15-11, 15-12, 15-9, 10-15 and 15-8.

"Things didn't go right," Hilbert said. "We couldn't get out of one rotation that cost us 10 points. They also played great defensively."

UM's Jennifer Pinkerton had 19 kills, 16 digs, seven blocks, and a .310 percentage.

Brown cut from Utah Jazz

By DAINA WILLIAMS

Former University of Idaho basketball forward Raymond Brown was cut from the National Basketball Association (NBA) Utah Jazz last week, but he was recruited for South Dakota's Rapid City Thrillers, a Continental Basketball Association (CBA) team.

Coach Ken Karmi Davis said although Utah was happy with him, the team had already contracted another player for one million dollars. "It will be interesting to see him play," Davis said. "I don't know very much about the team (Rapid City) or their coaching."

UI Sports Information Director Dave Cook said Brown was not shooting as well as he could have in the jazz team tryouts.

Brown is still trying out for the Rapid City Thrillers, but UI coaches say he believes he has made the team. He will be playing with rival Chris Childs of Boise State University.

Last year Brown was a for-ward for the Vandals, but he is not big enough to play this position for the Rapid City Thrillers.

"They need a big person to play in the forward position," Cook said.
