Old bookstore to provide additional study space

By SCOTT TROTER
Associate Editor

The old University of Idaho Bookstore will be open to-day and throughout the remainder of the semester to provide additional study space for students.

"The bookstore will temporarily open up for finals and dead week," said ASUI Sen. Patty McCray, who is primarily responsible for coming up with the idea of using the bookstore for study space.

"We came up with the idea to use the bookstore for studying about a week and a half ago," McCray said. "We approached Dean Veitras (SUB general manager) with the idea, and he gave the go-ahead to open up the space."

McCray said the extra space is necessary.

"I think that currently we have a large shortage of study space considering the number of people on campus," McCray said. "Except for the SUB, library and living groups, students have virtually no study space."

Many students agree with McCray.

"For getting sick and tired of the SUB being packed up to the nuts when I want to study," said student Chris Bruhns, who studies in the SUB regularly. "(The bookstore) is going to give us more space."

"It's a good idea," UI student John Kirkpatrick said. "Especially during finals, when the study rush is pretty big."

McCray said the SUB balcony was also considered as an additional room to use for studying.

"We wanted to open up the auditorium, but the lighting isn't good enough," she said.

"Students will be able to access the bookstore through doors located in the Vandergaaf. The bookstore's front doors will not be used," McCray said.

McCray also said on the top floor of the bookstore will be used for studying.

"We did not want to make the bottom level," she said. "There is a lack of study space, and there is a bunch of stuff is stored downstairs," she said.

Tables and chairs from the balcony will be set up for students," McCray said. "I think for a temporary setup, it's going to work really well."

The old bookstore will be open the same hours as the SUB, and starting Monday the SUB will increase its hours to accommodate students' needs. The SUB and the old bookstore will be open from 7 a.m. to 1 a.m. Monday through Thursday and 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. Friday and all day Saturday.

The SUB computer lab will also extend its hours next week to 8 a.m. to 3 a.m.

Thieves access tower:
Christmas star stolen

By SHERRY DEAL

A star hoisted up the KUOI radio tower on the SUB roof. The star was apparently stolen early Tuesday morning according to KUOI and SUB personnel.

"The star was last seen on top of the tower at 1 a.m. Tuesday," and Ken Pratt KUOI station manager noticed it was missing at about 10 a.m. Tuesday. "It sucked," Pratt said. "I'm sure it was just a stupid prank, and a selfish, dumb thing to do."

Jeff Kemberling. KUOI chief engineer, and Neil Hahn, KUOI engineer and SUB audio-visual technician, decided to put the star up after hearing it was an unused STAR decoration.

Kemberling and Hahn said when they first noticed the star was gone, they assumed someone from the administration had taken it down because of its religious significance. Tuesday morning, however, they learned that administrators had not taken it down.

"It's a mystery to everyone we've talked to," Kemberling said.

According to Kemberling, the star was hoisted about 25 feet up the tower, and held up with nylin cable ties. A 25-foot extension cord connected the star to a second cord that ran into the top of the SUB balcony.

Kemberling said when he went up on the roof Tuesday, the ATRU tower connecting the star to the tower had been cut, both the star and an attached extension cord were missing. The nylon cable was left lying on the roof.

Kemberling said whoever took the star used something to cut the ties. He also said it is difficult to reach the roof, and he believes it was probably accessed through the north windows on the third floor of the SUB.

SUB General Manager Dean Receivet said he had no idea whoever took the star has keys to the SUB. He said it would have taken two keys to get to the part of the roof where the star was located.

According to Hahn, part of the roof can be reached by climbing up the fire escape located in the tower on the side of the SUB. However, he said to access the section of the roof where the tower is located, someone would have to cross the lower part of the roof and then climb back up to

Senate prepares for opposition to passed audit proposal

By M.L. GARLAND
Editor

The ASUI Senate passed a resolution requesting a legislative audit of "all financial aspects of the university" Wednesday, although the Idaho State Board of Education will conduct an audit of student fees this month.

The results of the referendum (of whether to pursue litigation over possible misappropriation of last spring's $25-per-semester student fee increase) demonstrate that students didn't want to pursue a lawsuit but do want to find out where their money goes," ASUI Sen. Lisa Krepel said. "I felt an audit was the most effective way to do it." The resolution, co-authored by Krepel and ASUI President Tina Kagi, states that students and Idaho citizens "have the right to an informed of all financial transactions, income and expenditures related to the University of Idaho" and that the results of the audit should be made public.

"Copies of the audit results will be forwarded to the governor, Gov. Cecil Andrus, the State Board, legislators and UI President Elizabeth Zinder."

Legislative auditor Bruce J. Balderston said the last legislative audit of the UI was conducted in the early 1970s.

"I think 10 years is too long for any state-funded institution to go without some serious inspection and evaluation," Kagi said.

Balderston was unable to estimate the cost of a university audit due to the complexity of the situation and time and staff required. Arthur Anderson & Co. of Boise has been contracted to do external audits for the Legislature if necessary.

However, the ASUI Senate has received an opposition from Rep. James "Doc" Lucas, R-Meridian, who said a legislative audit is unnecessary and that state agencies are audited only every two to three years. "I see no reason to do it," Lucas said. "We have a very good system on controls — better than the state's." The State Board will follow the Legislature's lead on this issue.

"If the Legislature is going to do an audit, we should comply with that," Barton said.

Lucas also said the UI student government referendum might stimulate possible tuition legislation. Idaho Charter states that in-state tuition cannot be charged; only student matriculation fees can be charged.

"The point of a senate resolution is not an order to legislators," Krepel said. "This is a request of how the senate feels."
ASUI Senate pulls out of NISL

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

The ASUI Senate voted Wednesday night to withdraw from the North Idaho Student Lobby. The lobby, which includes North Idaho College and Lewis-Clark State College, was formed three weeks ago. It was intended to provide a more effective voice for 15,000 students and to represent their interests in the state Legislature.

"I think it's a shame the issue (NISL) died. It would have been very beneficial for students and well worth the money."

— Tina Kagi
ASUI President

The issue, which was heavily debated at the senate's pre-session and at the regular meeting, was eventually defeated 5-4. The regional lobby of northern schools was formed after student leaders from Boise State University, Idaho State University and the College of Southern Idaho decided not to join the Idaho Student Lobby. ASUI President Tina Kagi and supporters were trying to resurrect the ISL group, which died in the '70s.

Opponents of the issue said that the University of Idaho would not be getting its money's worth out of involvement in NISL. "For the money we're spending on it, I don't see how we're going to get a lot out of it," Sen. Patty McCray said during a debate at Wednesday's meeting. The UI would have put $2,500 into the lobby. NISL and LCSC would have paid between $700 and $800. These figures were determined by calculations based on 25 cents for each full-time student.

NISL delegate and senator Lisa Krepel, who wrote the four bills establishing UI's involvement in the lobby, said Thursday that she was disappointed, but that she understood the senate's concern. "They (the senators) felt that bringing our lobbyist up to par as well as being involved in NISL was too much for the senate at this time," Krepel said. Krepel was referring to the senate's approval of a $2,900 increase in the ASUI lobbyist's budget. The bill added $900 to the lobbyist's salary and set up a $2,000 expense account. The ASUI annually sends a lobbyist to the legislative session to represent UI students' interests. Several senators expressed hope that the Idaho Student Lobby group might succeed in the future.

Sen. Mike Mick said the ASUI should try the project again in a few years after the southern schools agree to be involved. "It would have a better chance then, instead of trying it now and having it fail," Mick said.

Krepel agreed on Thursday. "Each time it's been attempted we've gotten a little farther," Krepel said. "It would be fairly easy to establish now."

Kagi agreed, but said it would require cooperation among the schools.

"It's such a good idea, it's almost inevitable that it will come up again," Kagi said. "But its success relies heavily on the ASUI's level of involvement and commitment."

Kagi said that the ASUI formed the original ISL and that the other schools have always relied on the ASUI to organize the statewide lobby group from the start.

"If they want to see it happen, they'll have to show more support," Kagi said.

Kagi said former ASUI President Brad Cuddy began working on resurrecting the group two years ago, and that she had continued his work on the project throughout her entire term. "I think it's a shame the issue died," Kagi said Thursday. "It would have been very beneficial for students and well worth the money."

In other business, the senate approved the following appointments: M.L. Garland, ASUI lobbyist; Anne Wilde, Political Concerns Board chairwoman; Kristen Goodman, PCB vice chairwoman/Election Board chairwoman; and Lori Brackett, Activities Board member.
Dead week, finals, studying, shopping, grades - ‘HELP!’

By MARY A. SCHWANTZ, M.S., R.D.
Guest Columnist

The day begins at 4 or 5 a.m. during exam week and the weeks leading up to it, as the clock radio snaps on blaring news about El Salvador and continued fighting there. I’ve scheduled myself to study for biochemistry until 7 a.m., get ready for school, and arrange for a ride home for the holidays, but I soon get interrupted by phone calls from classmates who desperately need to see me for class notes sometime during this morning. When I consult my daily schedule book, a date circled in red reminds me that the surprise birthday party I’m planning for a friend three days from now will be a quiet dinner for two unless I send out the invitations TODAY. Concluding that I’m not going to look at my mail from yesterday or the morning’s newspaper until 11 a.m., I turn to my computer to grab a bite to eat; that’s when I realize I’m out of milk and down to my last egg. Mentally reviewing my overloaded schedule, I know I won’t have an hour to spare during the next four days of exams to go grocery shopping. At this point, I begin to develop a pounding headache. My stomach is churning, and I realize I’ve unconsciously clenched my hands into fists. Feel overwhelmed. WHAT IS STRESS?

In general, stress is the perception that events or circumstances have challenged your ability to cope. You feel you have lost control of a situation and are powerless to change things. While many people think of stress as a negative force, researchers have shown that stress can also be positive. In many activities, some level of stress is necessary to perform well (even on finals) and meet new challenges, thus raising your self-esteem. But perpetually working under crisis conditions can quickly become overwhelming, diminishing efficiency and productivity. Whether stress becomes a positive or negative force in your life depends on you and your ability to recognize stress and use it successfully during test week or any other time.

WHAT ARE STRESS- OVERLOAD SIGNALS?

If you find yourself under stress overload, you may feel anxious, be unable to relax, experience long periods of boredom, or not want to talk to people. Stress can also disrupt sleeping patterns and study performance. The physical symptoms can include headaches, cold hands or feet, indigestion, achy neck or back, ulcers, nausea, diarrhea or constipation, shortness of breath, heart palpitations, teeth grinding, muscle spasms and skin rashes. Most people assume that a major upheaval, such as the death of a close friend or spouse, can cause the greatest stress. But a study at the University of California at Berkeley indicates that everyday aggravations may take the greatest toll. Researchers found that the cumulative stress of such hassles as too many responsibilities, constant interruptions, irritating noise and the hasten of housework can far outweigh that of a major trauma.

WHAT’S THE BEST WAY TO COPE DURING EXAM WEEK?

Prioritize. When you’re feeling overwhelmed, it’s easy to forget that some tasks are more important than others. To help you get things in perspective, make a list of the things you need to accomplish, then rank them by importance or by short-term and long-term deadlines. You’ll feel a sense of accomplishment if you check off the items once they’ve been completed.

Exercising. Irresistibly, people often sacrifice workout time when their schedules become hectic. Exercise is perhaps the single most effective defense against stress because it helps dilute energy nervous and allows more rapid metabolism of stress-related hormones to counteract their effects on the body. Exercise may also influence your perception of how much pressure you’re under. A 1986 study of 4,526 men at Alabama’s Auburn University showed that those who were out of shape were more likely to believe that their lives were more stressful than those who exercised regularly.

Eat right and drink non-alcoholic beverages. Eat a balanced diet (something from each of the four food groups) at each meal. And choose foods that are not dehydrated during stressful times because the digestive tract slows down under stress, causing indigestion and heartburn. Eat fresh fruits and vegetables not only for the fiber to prevent constipation, but for the vitamin C content. Large doses of vitamin C are advocated as beneficial in various conditions of stress, including emotional stress. It’s better to eat vitamin C as it comes in foods rather than to take supplements.

Drink no more than two or three cups of regular coffee because the caffeine may cause jittery nerves, and alcohol as it inhibits thinking ability. There’s no doubt about it, alcohol causes neurological changes in transmitting messages to the brain, and no one needs brain hindrances during exams. From a nutritional standpoint, alcohol is high in calories and contains very few nutrients; it is particularly troublesome because it either replaces other essential and nutritious foods or adds excess calories.

While decreasing alcohol consumption is good for your health and your wallet, to control calories you need to be sure that you do not substitute something equally high in calories for alcohol.

1. Choose a nutrition-packed, low-calorie tomato or tomato-vegetable juice. Add lemon juice, pepper and/or hot sauce for more flavor.

2. Fruit juices is a good source of nutrients, but has so much natural sugar that it is not really a low-calorie drink. Eight ounces of orange juice has the same number of calories as eight ounces of regular cola. For a refreshing low-calorie beverage, use just one-fourth glass orange juice and fill the rest of the glass with club soda or mineral water.

3. The same principle of using club soda or seltzer with wine to make a wine spritzer makes a low-alcohol drink with few calories.

4. If alcohol has been a way for you to deal with stress or emotions, get in the habit of turning to other more positive outlets. Go for a walk; exercise, develop hobbies, keep a diary as an emotional outlet.

Grinch also ruins Christmas for themselves

T he Grinch is back and looney in Moscow stealing holiday cheer and scampering bad will toward man in his wake.

"It's just sad if someone takes one (a tree) in bad weather," said Associated Students of UI (ASUI) Agriculture Coordinator Richard Naskali. The KUOI lighted star placed on top of the SUB Tuesday is missing as well.

And you thought the Grinch was a fictional character in a Dr. Seuss book.

In the 23 years Naskali has been at the university, he's never seen a theft or trees stolen on campus and from the arboretum. However, according to George Driskill, construction management specialist for the UI Physical Plant, it is a community problem.

"It happens every year — not only on university property but privately, too," Driskill said.

Last year a 20-foot fir tree from the arboretum was cut down, with only the top three feet taken. "It's like shooting a bull elk for the horns," Driskill said.

Or a whole herd.

Abortion misconceptions

Editor: Todd Harper's last pro-abortion editorial (Oct. 20) instigated that ending lawful, unrestricted abortions would escalate the current human population explosion.

But contrary to this belief, overpopulation has resulted from social misconceptions, not opposition to sacrificing lives of the unborn.

If pro-choice control is desirable, then choose to prevent conceptions. Exercise the moral discipline needed to abort simulate sexual acts that produce unwanted children. Liberals that will decline without destroying human life.

Harper also hinted that since anti-abortionists oppose depriving unwanted human embryos of life, they are not sensitive to poverty and malnutrition. Reality studies have linked to those who produce human life, then slaughter it rather than face the responsibility of their sexual conduct.

The editorial suggested that forcing anti-abortionists to adopt the children pro-abortionists prefer to exterminate would convert anti-abortionists into pro-abortionists. This childish suggestion would show the results of undisguised sexual behavior on those who speak out against the cruelty of abortion.

So, according to Harper, punishment for opposing unwanted children could be enforced by compelling his opponents to adapt and live with pro-abortion misconceptions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Shame on U, ASUI Senate

Another ASUI administration bites the big one as yet another fresh bunch of faces prepares to assume the position. Think of this, then, as an open letter to the outgoing and incoming ASUI officers from one of their constituents.

First, I want to impart my own Shame On U to the members of the outgoing ASUI student government. Some of you admirable stand on various issues, but this was overwhelmed by your continual backbiting and back-stabbing, which accomplished next to nothing.

Don't you people realize that this kind of crap is just what the administration loves? It keeps the student government off-balance, unfocused and mostly off the university's back. The ASUI will never rise above the status of a pancake. I think the students if you folks can't learn to work together. How are the students supposed to speak on a platform when front row" student leaders" are endlessly engaged in petty demagoguery and usually politics? This isn't a training camp for the G0P. It's a real university and if our University Bowl would be proud of your collective shoebox feats, but if you want to practice for big-league politics, do it somewhere else. Let's hope the incoming ASUI government is mature enough to avoid the foibles of its predecessors.

This brings me to our newly elected ASUI officers. Ever wonder why so few students turn out to vote? There's really no mystery — just apathy. Like the national elections, people just don't care. In the case of ASUI elections, it's apathy plus a general belief that the student government is largely ineffective and something for people to pad their resumes with.

There's also the perception that the ASUI government has little more than token status — a teething ring for the student body. Unfortunately, these perceptions might not be totally unfounded.

The new ASUI president and senator will have to contend with an administration that has traditionally not allowed the ASUI the autonomy to be a truly representative body.

Why? It simply boils down to a conflict of interests — the administration vs. the students. The administration claims to want what's best for the university as a whole and, for the most part, that's probably true. But wait! That doesn't mean there's any great river or irrigation flowing from "that crested hill." Like all entrenched bureaucracies, the administration wants what's best for the administration because that's usually what's best for the administration.

Think of it this way. Time is on the administration's side. The student population is temporary, transient in nature. Every year there's a new ASUI senate and president. Most of us are here for only four or five years. After that, we're off to search for mortgages, IRAs, stock options and the ever elusive American dream. So why should we care if our fees are raised to pay for the engineering and business colleges' accreditation scams? In Idaho, most of us will end up making more money than those who instructed us anyway. So who cares?

On the other hand, the administration is entrenched and shielded forever. Those with power want to keep it. What's good for the students who contribute financially to this institution isn't always what's good for "the bill." Segregated parking certainly doesn't benefit the entire university.

And although the recent fee increase was couched in terms of university-wide benefit, I haven't noticed that my department is able to update any of its equipment. Students should protest!

Imagize if the ASUI could really represent student interests.
Ask Lois:
People are fundamentally stupid

Q. The other day, while driving to class, I saw a following a mini-car that had some Greek hieroglyphics on the rear window. The driver had a puffy pom-pom do. When the light was just right, I could cause her whole head appeared to be translucent. Could it be?

A. Probably, but if she wears a hat just right, no one will notice. Also, surrounded as she probably lives, socializes, sleeps, etc.) by other translucent pom-pom heads, this condition becomes normal. Unfortunately, the translucent head pattern is being recognized as an alarming symptom of a larger problem; there is a correlation between the translucent heads and the hieroglyphics. Universal studies by pork-barrel subsidized researchers (undoubtedly a spinoff from SDR development) and desperate sociology doctoral students show that a remarkably high percentage of translucent head sufferers sport hieroglyphics on their cars, clothing, hats, interior decor, tableware, and more insidious locations. This leads researchers to suggest that organizations identified by such hieroglyphics actually require head translucence. Since that thought is too scary to comprehend, I hope they all wear their hats just right.

Q. Ever since the Great Parking Code of the University of Idaho moved the exit of the parking lot at Sixth and Bayhoure (the one north of the Law Building) a few yards south, I have seen some really stupid people driving down the little corner walkway (diagonally across from Willie Sunset Hall) and directly into the intersection of Sixth and Bayhoure. What are they thinking?

A. Let's revert to Ask Lois' Rule of All Importance and Unequivocal: "People are fundamentally stupid." As long as everyone remembers that, human behavior remains completely comprehensible. I hope they all wear their hats just right.

A professor of forest science at Texas A&M University has been named director of the University of Idaho's new Forest, Wildlife and Range Policy Analysis Group.

Jay O'Laughlin assumes his post Dec. 20 as leader of the group at UI's College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences.

The group was created earlier this year by the Idaho Legislature to analyze the potential impacts of proposed natural resource policies.

Forestry Dean John Hendee said, "Dr. O'Laughlin is a westerner, an avid outdoorsman, and he appreciates what we have in Idaho."

"I believe he will be an outstanding leader for the program, the first of its kind in the nation," Hendee said.

Hendee also said O'Laughlin has a strong educational background and experience in the private sector.

"First and foremost, I'll be a good listener," O'Laughlin said.

'Holiday Treasures' concert performed this weekend

The Washington Idaho Symphony and the Symphony Chorale will present "Holiday Treasures" Saturday at 8 p.m. in the University of Idaho Administration Auditorium and Idaho at 3 p.m. at Lewiston High School. Kevin Johnson will conduct the orchestra, and Bob Demaree will direct the chorale.

This program will be the orchestra and choir performing Bach's Christmas Oratorio. According to Johnson, this is the "ultimate piece for choir and orchestra and the Baroque period" and is the "mainstay" of the European holiday repertoire.

Solos for the Christmas Oratorio will be Behesheh Demaree, soprano; Dawn Hagerty, mezzo-soprano; Bob Demaree, tenor; and Alan Jennings, bass.

After an intermission, the orchestra will perform Handel's Overture, Fireball's A Clock, a piece Mendelssohn wrote about his trip to the coast of Britain. Johnson said that Brahms was particularly inspired by this composition and felt it was a masterpiece.

Tickets for both performances are available at the door, or at Ticket Express in Moscow, or at Corner Drug in Pullman. Tickets are $5.00 for adults, $3.50 for seniors, $4.00 for college students and $2.00 for children.

'Dad' poignant yet funny

If you are thinking about taking in a movie with your family over Christmas break, the one to see is "Dad.

Dad is an excellent movie to see with your parents. It is the poignant story of a son and father and strengthening his relationship with his aging parents and his own.

Dad and I found ourselves laughing and crying during this film. I rarely see my father with tears in his eyes, but this is not a typical movie.

Dad brings to light issues that everyone can and should face including nursing homes, medical care, the aging process, and family dynamics. It shows the difficulties for families to come to terms with, but Dad shows us that things can be done.

Ted Danson plays a middle-aged Wall Street executive who returns home after his heart attack, played by Olympia Dukakis, has a heart attack. Once home he fears that his father, played by Jack Lemmon, has become senile and dependent on his mother. But he decides to try to help his father to be self-sufficient, and in the process he learns a lot about himself, his parent and his own.

Danson does an excellent job portraying the son. This role, which is his best work to date, calls for a variety of emotions, and Danson does them all with charm.

Dukakis plays a feisty mother and grandmother. She has previous portrayed this role well, and this time it is no exception, as she provides several of the comic relief moments in the film.

Lemmon is outstanding as the aging father. His performance is a great deal that he is supposed to accomplish in him in his change from a forgetful, strong, vital senior citizen.

I recommend this movie for everyone, but especially for families. It will help family members discuss some important topics.

Along with entertaining Dad will educate you.

'Parenthood' a fun ride

By MATT HELMICK & JEFF FINN

Parenthood is a hilarious roller-coaster ride into the atmosphere for this film as well as life.

Steve Martin stars as Gil, an uptight living who is a son and a whole lot of trouble. Tom Hulce is Gil's younger brother who shows up at their parents' house with a snow axe and snowboarding dates. Diurnally opposite Hulce is Rick Moranis, who plays Gil's brother-in-law. Moranis is completely obsessed with his preschooler, but when Gil skips off to a Slovakia to avoid his problems, he leaves his daughter to drive his brother to the school.

Jason Roberts is perfectly cast as Gil's drawling of a father. While never impressed with well-meaning Gil, Roberts manages to overlook the disaster of the movie.

The rest of the family go through roller-coaster rides of their own with their similar results. Everyone with the exception of the two who skip off to a Slovakia to avoid their problems, groans and changes by the end of the movie.

People reconcile their relations, and problems are resolved. Martin shows he can be a serious actor but still have double over laugh with laughter when the role times. This movie makes an independent, old person to the high part of the roller-coaster ride we call life.

This is the time of year when students seriously consider convenience store careers. They get tension headaches, major case of crankiness, and of course the dreaded "Why am I in school?"

What is your favorite thing to do when you are absolutely sick of studying? University of Idaho students gave a variety of answers, everything from running nacked through the arboretum to bazing a pledge to cuddling with someone special.

Maybe a few of the following answers will help relieve some of your tension by providing a laugh or two.

"I sleep." - Chris Pfeiffer

"I like to socialize, go out for ice cream." - Patti Hogan

"Go shopping for clothes, makeup, anything will do." - Cupid Hart

"Play computer games." - George Purzer

"Take a hot bath in candle-light and have a glass of wine." - Lynn Major

"Drink - go out and party."

"Go grocery shopping and prepare gourmet feasts.

Bretti Kelley

"I pound my head against walls and scream a lot."

"Wivana Gilbert

"Go out and have a few beers with my friends."

"My Three Sons, Mr. Ed and a bottle of beer."

"I like to ride my mountain bike ... to the Garden."

"Adam Habel

"Play sports." - Brooke Fisher

"Go for a run, do 26 push-ups, then relax in the 'alle di bain.'" - Scott Trotter

"Go to a movie." - Michel de Wreien

"Tan." - Brenda Buck

"Vog out in front of the TV." - Valerie Lavender

"Call my mom and dad or get my sister to buy the food." - Brooke Bailey

"The answers were given by people who wanted to remain anonymous:"

"Run nacked through the arboretum."

"Play the bagpipes really loud."

"Turn on the music - loud, scream and dance around."

"Read a nasty snark butt."

"Cut my own hair."

"Make my famous Chinese stir fry wrapped in a soft tortilla."

"Lay on my favorite big brown couch."

"I like to crochet, really."

"(from a male)"

"Scrub the bathroom tile with a toothbrush."

"Pick the lint off my hair dryer."

"Drive to Orofino and party at the Oasis."

"Have sex."

Finally, Argonaut staff members came up with a few suggestions of their own.

Build a snowman. Yeah?"

There's no snow!

"Load the entertainment editor's scooter to Simmt Mart for a soda."

Breathe on windows."

"Scrub obscenities out the Argonaut windows at drunk people walking home from Murdock's."

Cut our fingers with exacto-knives."

Listen to Ed sing. Cry.

Walk around campus, admiring its beauty, and thanking goodness for the opportunity to attend this beautiful and friendly university.

Finally, remember that there are only two weeks left in the semester, and grades don't come out until after you have all your Christmas presents.
Karen’s ice cream is a real treat for the taste buds

By SHIRLEE CARBAUGH
Staff Writer

Karen’s Old Fashioned Ice Cream is a family-run business managed by Karen Linderman. This was a gift from my father,” Linderman said. “I was not intending on getting into the ice cream business, but I guess my father kind of inspired me into it.”

Karen’s advertisements say “homemade,” and that’s a fact. One employee is generally in charge of making the ice cream. Pounds of candy are unwrapped and cut daily, and the mixers seem to be running constantly. Linderman said that at least four batches of ice cream are made each day.

ATMOSPHERE: The atmosphere at Karen’s is the vision of an old-fashioned parlor, with benches and an old-time ice cream maker. Many depictions of tempting morsels hang on the walls. Karen’s is definitely a cheery place.

SERVICE: Karen’s mostly employs enthusiastic and friendly Moscow High School students. Several members of Linderman’s family also work in the store. The service is prompt and pleasant.

TASTE: The luscious chocolate ice cream is incredible and will leave all chocolate lovers completely satisfied. The newest flavor, bear claws, is for devotion of the peanut butter-chocolate mix.

PRICE: The average ice cream cone costs $1, which is highly competitive with all other parlors. One would have to eat a LOT to spend more than $3 at Karen’s.

Karen’s is the place to go for great home-made ice cream.

Projectionist job never dull

By CHRIS WUTHRIC
Contributing Writer

Have you ever wondered who is behind the wall showing those fun films you see in the UCC building?

“Well where else could you have so much freedom in a job?” — Jason Lee

Projectionist

Projected}

Well, the answer is the Instructional Media Center’s projectionist crew.

Every day, the projectionists perform jobs ranging from equipment delivery to film maintenance.

The crew, employed through the federal government Work Study Program, does all these jobs and more. Projectionists work seven days a week for university professors, faculty and students.

Jason Lee, a UI sophomore and projectionist, said he enjoys his job.

“I love it,” said Lee. “Where else could you have so much freedom in a job?”

Freedom is the word that describes the projectionist’s job. According to Lee, he is allowed to work flexible hours, drive the IMC van and pick up projects he wants to work on.

“All of this plus watching fun and exciting films,” said Lee. Lee said there are relatively few drawbacks to his job, which may call him to work at 7 a.m. on Saturdays, or 8 p.m. on Tuesday nights. He said the job requires a great deal of dedication.

“Have been harried by angry professors because my film did not go right, or just because they have had a bad day,” said Lee.

Lee said he once showed up to set up some equipment for the theater department, and they complained to him about the room they were put in at the SUB.

“I was very diplomatically about it.”

RADICAL THOUGHTS

“This is the verdict: Light has come into the world, but men loved darkness instead of light because their deeds were evil. Everyone who does evil hates the light, and will not come into the light for fear that his deeds will be exposed. But whoever lives by the truth comes into the light, so that it may be seen plainly that what he has done HAS BEEN DONE THROUGH GOD.”

Vandals beat Whitworth

By RUSS BIAGGONE
Sports Editor

Despite the University of Idaho Vandals' 76-60 victory over the Whitworth College Pirates Wednesday, UI Head Coach Kermit Davis was not pleased.

"If we play like that on Friday against Texas Southern, we'll get beat by 15 to 20 points," Davis said.

Although the Vandals defeated the Pirates by a 16-point margin, Whitworth was never out of the game. Toward the end of the first half, a dunk by Clifford Martin put the Vandals up 29-19, but the Pirates were not ready to give up. Tenacious defense and a scrappy offense pulled Whitworth to within five points of the Vandals. At halftime the Vandals lead was only 36-31.

As the second half began, the Vandals looked like they were going to put the Pirates away, and led 56-42 with 11 minutes left to play. The Vandals were led by the scoring of Sammie Freeman, Riley Smith, and Ricardo Boyd and the ball handling of guards Cesar Peraldo and Otis Livings-

The Pirates never got back into the game. Davis said, "Randy proved he can play with strong teams. He could easily play for a Division I team."

Despite the Vandals' inconsistencies, Davis gave the Pirates credit.

Lady Vandals go 1 - 1 in California

By AMY JAMISON
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Lady Vandal basketball team had a long weekend in California after defeating the University of Santa Clara and being defeated by the University of San Francisco in double overtime.

In their 58-55 win over USC Friday, the Lady Vandals were led by high-scoring Sabrina Dial, who chalked up 13 points, five steals and eight rebounds.

UI held the marginal lead and kept the lead with tough playing from the bench, as Courtney Edwards scored 10 points in the last 10 minutes of the game. Jennifer Ballinger also added 10 points.

“Their came off the bench and scored when we were having trouble getting scores from other individuals,” UI Head Coach Laurie Turner said.

Monday UI faced USF in another pre-season game, but the outcome did not resemble the first. The Lady Vandals lost 84-76 in a hard-fought, double-overtime game.

Foul trouble plagued the team in overtime play, as four Vandals starters fouled out by the second overtime.

Hettie Defong, the only starter remaining in the second overtime, kept the team in the game by contributing 19 points. Dial and Sherry Persenon each added nine rebounds.

Friday the Vandals will begin their attempt to dominate the Wheatland Tournament in Spokan, when they face Gonzaga University.

Washington State University and Eastern Washington University will also play in the tournament.

Turner said WSU has won the tournament the last two years. “We’re hoping to get in this year’s championship game with them,” Turner said.

KELLER NAMED COACH OF WEST TEAM. Mike Keller, long-time University of Idaho track and field coach, has been named head coach of the West team at next year’s U.S. Track and Field Festival, July 12-15. Aiding Keller will be Chick Bishop of Weber State College, Rob Stark of Montana State University and Ed Groسن of Arizona State University.

LIFEGUARD TRAINING. The University of Idaho Swim Center will hold a lifesaving and Lifeguard training session this month. For more information contact the Intramural Recreation Department.
We've finally come full circle. We started this year's hunting season talking about bowhunting deer and elk and, once again, the season is now open. But hunting late-season critters is an entirely different game, and the hunter must adjust accordingly.

This year's weather has been terrible! Snow is something everyone else is getting and we keep hoping for. Last year my late-season hot spot had three feet of snow by now, which made finding the animals easy since they used the same trails daily when moving from their grassfield feeding areas into the timber to bed. And with fresh snow every day, tracking was enjoyable since I could tell where the elk were moving and roughly how long ago they were there.

Since snow is a problem, count on doing quite a bit more leg-work to find game. Deer should not be a problem, as they tend to feed in the grassfields and move only a short distance to bed. Elk are another story. Don't count on them to do anything you expect. These mobile animals can bed a mile or more away from their food source, so getting to them will require more time and work.

A positive note with this poor weather is the warm temperature. Stand hunters will be able to spend more time silently waiting for game and less time jumping up and down trying to stay warm.

A combination of tracking and stand hunting can be very successful. Deer and elk tend to be more active later in the day and move more frequently as the temperatures get colder, so remember that if we get snow and a cold spell within the next few weeks.

If you can't find any game, keep in mind that with some snow on surrounding mountains, deer and elk will move into the grassfield canyons scattered around the Palouse, in areas from Potlatch to as far south as Grangeville. How concentrated the animals are is hard to say. With heavy snows, I would bet my bow there would be deer and an occasional elk in every timbered draw and timber patch near a grassfield, but this year we'll have to see. In the meantime, pray for snow.
