Condom vending machine to be placed in dorm

By KRISTIN PROUTY
Staff Writer

A health product vending machine will dispense condoms and over-the-counter drugs in the Wallace Complex game room as part of the University of Idaho Wellness Program.

The program, headed by the UI Student Health Service, focuses on good health habits. Dr. Donald Chin, director of the Student Health Service, hopes the machine will help prevent the spreading of sexually transmitted diseases and open the door for more health education.

The machine, which should be installed within two weeks, will supply students with 15 low-cost items such as aspirin, decongestants, lotions, sunscreen and condoms. The cost will be kept under $1 per item.

Depending upon response, vending machines may be placed in the Student Union Building, the library and the Satellite SUS.

Condoms and other health products may currently be purchased at the health center's pharmacy. The vending machine will make these products more conveniently available. Chin said he believes the easier access to condoms may curb the spread of the diseases on campus.

"HPV, also known as genital warts, is up 300 percent from last year," Chin said. "Once a person contracts an STD, there's little we can do medically to get rid of it."

STDs are sexually transmitted diseases such as AIDS, HPV, herpes, and hepatitis B, which can be transmitted through blood products as well as through sexual contact.

"I hope if there's a need for it, I'll fill that need," Chin said. "I suspect that it will be used."

Washington State University, with 3,000 cases of herpes, set up machines in the CUB, in the library and in a dorm. Four hundred condoms are being purchased per month.

"I hope that they do get used and that people become more aware of STDs," said Lynn Vershum, vice president of Upham Hall and student representative of the Infectious Disease Task Force. "STDs aren't selective. A person can get them on their first or hundredth time."

Upham Hall first came up with the idea for condom machines in their hall last April.

"I think we had everything to do with the installation of health-related machines," Vershun said. "If we hadn't brought the subject up, someone else would have eventually."

Upham Hall members have put their vending machine on hold until they see the response to the Wallace Complex installation. Instead, hall members may purchase condoms from the health center at 5 cents each and have a person sell from his room.

STUDENTS' UNION KIIBBLE

Administrative compensates for lines

By Viviane Gilbert
News Editor

Almost 2,000 University of Idaho students who failed to pay their university bills had to wait in long lines at the Controller's Office before registering Tuesday.

However, the administration tried to sweeten the bill by voiding parking tickets and providing snacks courtesy of University Dining Services.

Traditionally, the Controller's Office holds students' registration packages if they have outstanding bills on their accounts. Students were unable to register until the bills were paid.

According to UI Financial Vice President Joe Geiger, any tickets issued Tuesday at the Administration Building parking lot for motor or permit violations will be voided. However, tickets given to vehicles parked in reserved spaces and to vehicles that clog up traffic flow will still be enforced.

University Dining Services offered free coffee, pop, cookies and finger sandwiches to the waiting crowd. Staff members from the Wallace Cafeteria walked up and down the halls with trays, offering food to the students standing in line.

According to Geiger, this was the administration's way of admitting they were part of the problem.

Geiger estimated that in the morning some students had to wait in line an hour before being able to pay. The lines stretched from the cashier's booths down the upstairs and downstairs hallways in the Administration Office Building.

However, the office "redesigned it on the run," Geiger said, by bringing in more cashiers. By the early afternoon, the average wait was only 20 minutes, Geiger said.

UI Trust and Investment Office Robert Steele said about 2,700 envelopes were held because of unpaid bills. Preliinary reports from the Controller's Office estimated that the average packet held was $50.

"Although the office tried to accommodate students by being open Sunday and Monday and having seven cashiers ready to handle the expected crowds, only about 600 students paid in advance."

"We're trying to accommodate the students and make it as easy as possible to go to school here," Steele said. "But students need to learn to take advantage of that."

According to Geiger, students need to realize the bills must be paid before they can register and that students need to be responsible enough to pay in advance. He suggested that students pay bills before they leave town. "Send a check in the mail, or go into the office early to pay before registration day."

Geiger said that the long lines were "the end of the road" in the process of converting to a preregistration system.

"This is another example of things we need to tidy up and do better," Geiger said.

Geiger commended UDS for their prompt service. He said that UDS employees responded to students within 30 minutes of his call and later offered to donate the food.

UDS director Lynn Morrison estimated that UDS donated the 40 gallons of beer, 200 cookies and 750 foun-grounds students. "Once students got to the ASUI-Kibbie Dome, however, registration went smoothly."

"Preregistration is already demonstrated its greatly reduced level of hassle as far as the activities that go on in the (Kibbie) Dome," Geiger said. "The one loose end that both the students and the administration know they still need to learn to deal with a little better is the withholding of the packets due to outstanding bills."
UI architecture students propose library expansion across Rayburn St.

By DENISE BUNCH
Staff Writer

Two-year-old University of Idaho architecture students have run into some controversy for a proposal that would expand the UI library across Rayburn Street and onto the football practice field.

In their class project, Hal Jensen and Terry Cano propose to make the library the focal point on campus by putting a main entrance tower in the middle of Rayburn Street.

And the plan is also controversial because it would break the traditional grid on the UI campus. Presently, the university is on a grid that runs north to south and east to west. Jensen and Cano's proposal would direct campus growth toward the Hartung Theater and the west end of campus.

"This could mean to those buildings that just sit out there by themselves," Jensen said.

The project has received a great deal of attention since $400,000 was appropriated to the library last year and another $12 million library and classroom building was approved to top the Legislature's building list this winter. According to a recent news article, university officials say the library should be expanded to accommodate growth and new library technology.

Architecture professor and former facility planner Neil Reese said Jensen and Cano's plan is certainly a good possibility and that architects hired by the UI should study the plan carefully. Reese said economic factors should be considered, however, since the plane would spread the library out over a large area.

Jensen and Cano's plan is one of many senior architecture projects that will be displayed in the library lobby next week.

N. Thomas Jensen, the building architect, said that he is interested in reorienting the library on the campus, but that he is more interested in reorienting the architecture of the building.

One third-year student, who has already done a presentation on the project, is interested in the history of the building and the historical significance of the library.

Another of the students involved in the project is a fourth-year student.

He said that the project was also in his interest to expand the library.

The project will be on display in the library lobby next week and will be presented to the campus at the end of the week.

Forget Columbus, recognize MLK

As one of only four states that hasn’t recognized Martin Luther King Day as a holiday, Idaho needs to establish such a commemoration of its own, particularly since the state’s citizens have a great reputation for racial prejudice.

Here are a few examples of Idaho’s outstanding lack of recognition of prejudice and/or ignorance in Idaho:

• Of course, it is widely known that Hayden did not want the state of the United Nations, one of the nation’s most visible white supremacist groups.

• White supremacist-founded the house of Bill Wassmuth, director of the Northwest Coalition Against Malicious Harassment. Wassmuth was a Roman Catholic priest living in Cour d’Alene at the time.

• Last September the story broke that a federal prosecutor for Idaho said Hispanic family organizations were behind the “most significant” influx of drugs into the state. The prosecutor, Maurice Ellsworth, later apologized for his statement.

• In reaction to the Idaho Legislature’s (Cour d’Alene) legislation to recognize Martin Luther King Day on the third Monday in January, some Idaho legislators have voiced opposition to the prospective holiday. The reasons are all poor ones.

• Sen. Mark Rick, R- Rexburg, said he disagrees with the symbol and therefore opposes the holiday. In Rick’s opinion, “there have been people who have done so much more than be raised on a hamburger.”

• It would be interesting to see who Rick’s thinking has done so much more than Martin Luther King Jr. Rick’s seems to ignore the fact that Martin Luther King is an important figure of liberation to most minorities and to many Caucasians as well, just because there aren’t many African-Americans in Rexburg doesn’t change that.

• Other legislators are concerned about the money a new holiday would cost Idaho due to the lost production of state employees. Sen. John Hansen, R-Idaho Falls, offers a solution: Scrap Columbus Day and put Martin Luther King Day on the list instead. Sounds perfect. Martin Luther King Jr. has a lot more significance to our nation and state than Christopher Columbus ever had.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Vandal cards requested

Editor:

I am a sports nut, and my hobby is collecting sports crime prevention sets. This promotion is set up between youngsters and the police officers. Generally the police give one out or two cards a week with a safety tip or “don’t take drugs” message. These cards also have a basketball or football player on them. Theoretically, the only way to get cards is for the kids to present to the police officer for them in person, and thereby a rapport with the officers is developed. These cards are also given away at college games by police officers.

I am real proud of my collection, and I have one of the largest. But I am missing the 1984 and 1985 Idaho Vandal football crime prevention sets, and any other sets that may come out.

I am hoping a reader can help me with any of these sets. I have lots of sports crime prevention sets I can trade—Seahawks, Sonics, Mariners, etc.

Civil Rights Day a logical step

For Dr. Donald Chinn and the Student Health Service for their work in getting a condom/pharmaceutical vending machine placed in the Walsh Complex game room.

The members of Upham Hall should also be commended for their efforts to produce contraceptive supplies. There are many students who do not buy them because they are not embarrassed about purchasing contraceptives from another person. The vending machines should provide a relief from such embarrassment for some students.

The vending machine should be in operation within the next few weeks, according to Chin, Student Health Service director. Chin promised the vending machines, and the UI administration approved the project.

Chin said that surveys will also be sent out in the next two weeks to determine what products the students want in the vending machines. Besides condoms, the machines will contain decongestants, pain-relievers and contraceptives.

It is refreshing to see that the UI has put aside its prudish attitude and is finally recognizing that contraceptives need to be more accessible to students.

CIVIL RIGHTS Day a logical step

Racism, bigamy and diversity, key topics of the University of Idaho’s celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. University officials have been limited to a weekend in January. The decision to set aside a day in remembrance of King is one step forward, a step many fear to take, on a road stretching for miles.

When the small Washington town of Colfax chose to celebrate Civil Rights Day instead of Martin Luther King Jr. Day, some parties accused the city of racism. Is Civil Rights Day not the next step on the road to equality for all?

Choosing to honor one specific leader of the civil rights movement limits the scope of that movement. It detracts from the importance of Emmett Till, Rosa Parks, Malcolm X and each person who boycotted a bus or marched on Washington D.C.

King was instrumental in the civil rights movement, but he didn’t carry it alone. Many also seek to limit his role to that of only a black leader. This tunnel vision sends civil rights...

People of all national or ethnic backgrounds, colors, races and physical abilities deserve the same rights and privileges.

We must eliminate laws that discriminate on the basis of biological characteristics and ethnic origin. Only then can we celebrate Human Rights Day.

But we can’t stop there. Changing the law alone will not ensure human rights for all.

Human rights will not exist in America until people subvert our current political system to create a truly just society.

As long as Americans continue to revel in their African or European heritage, racism and bigotry will thrive. Cultural differences must be viewed as something to celebrate.

COMMENTARY

I recently returned from an important fact-finding mission on which I scribbled several possible facts down on bar napkins:
1) America is still the leader of the free world and of T-shirt sales;
2) A McDonald's Gold Card is considered a major credit card;
3) Hawaii spends half its budget impaling cocktail umbrellas from the industrial belt to placate surly maile-tiring tourists;
4) Pigs and goats are destroying Maui's tropical forests.

It's hard to imagine the wholesale destruction of tropical forests by pigs and goats. Maybe they're just getting Bad Press, which coincidentally is the Bush Administration's major whine every time it's caught with its pants at half mast. The latest allegation, in case you're tabloid illiterate, is that presidential spokesman, Major Marvin Fitzwater is actually Uncle Fester from the Addams Family TV series, which, if true, begs the question, "Why wasn't Gilligan considered for the Vice presidency?"

Journal of Bad Press, George "TM WARNING YOU STOP CALLING ME A WIMP!" Bush could very well be the most popular president since his predecessor (played by Donald Rumsfeld). But he does gone press continues to flail at the First Amendment by using its own words to report the news, instead of those endorsed by Uncle Fester & Co. First there was Operation Just Cause in Panama, the Canal Zone, where some alarmists suggested that the disregard of international law and the presence of a few thousand American troops constituted an "invasion," and later an "occupation," when it was clearly, in Mr. Bush's own words, a "kind of casual six to twelve-month picnic/burn trash type of thing." Potato, po-ta-to? In any case, Panamanians showed their gratitude by entirely riddling the capital city's shops of opposing consumer items.

Then there was the "split screen" incident, when the president was allowed to make unscripted comments on one side of the TV screen about the Panamanian body count of being "up in the 600s," while the actual body count was being unified on the other side of the TV. Again, Bad Press. The networks should have known he would make some comment revealing the insight of a baked potato and should have asked advance permission. Perhaps a constitutional amendment requiring a split-screen early warning system is called for..." Then there was the flap about sending an official envoy to the Chinese government a few weeks after peaceable demonstrators were massacred by none other than the Chinese government. Guess what? Bad Press again. The Leader of the Free World, in classic Lincoln-esque prose, pointed out that it was NOT an official exchange, but an "informal sort of mishmash deshloyed." I guess he really got the press on THAT one.

Then there was the Malta Summit, which was dominated by Mikhail Gorbatchev. Most of the questions Bush fielded dealt with gun lamps and the spots on his face. So the aforementioned made a daring boat ride, in choppy seas, risking life, limb and lunch by returning to...a U.S. Naval Yacht. Yeah, instead of probing questions surrounding this act of war crimes (as in "why, knucklehead, bring me mache cheese, Moot?"). All journalists asked about were the contents of Presidential Bag 1.

And who could forget the night Mr. B. on national TV, brandished a baggie of crack cocaine bought in a park across from the White House? The pressniks once again spoiled the powerful image, though, by revealing that White House operatives had to practically kidnap a dealer, drag him to the park, and threaten to make him Dan Quayle's publicist before he would sell them the crack. Of course the underlying friction causing severe chafing to the Bush image with every step is the wimp thing. Health Center to expand nutritional programs

By SHERRY DEAL

The Student Health Center is expanding its programs to help students with a variety of nutritional concerns.

Mary Schwantes, the new nutrition director at the Student Health Center, said she can help all students who are interested in their health. She works with students who want to lose weight, gain weight, lower cholesterol, raise fiber, lower sodium or just have their eating habits evaluated to ensure they are eating properly.

"I am here to serve the students," she said. "I can help with whatever they are interested in or concerned about."

Schwantes, who has a master's degree in nutrition, was hired from the University of Idaho. She said all students should be concerned about good nutrition.

"It doesn't bother me a bit," he said. "Rationally, people don't go to the health service. It (the vending machine) doesn't step on anybody's toes, and is probably a lot less embarrassing for some guys than walking up to the counter in some drugstore to buy them. Personally, I like making the older saleroom people blush."

Sonja Schlaefer, a sophomore on Houston Hall, said: "It wouldn't bother me a bit because I never go down there. I think most girls don't, so I don't have a problem with it." She said the idea for condom machines in their hall last April.

"I think we had everything to do with the installation of health-related machines," Upham said. "If we hadn't brought the subject up, someone else would have eventually."

Upham Hall members have put their vending machines on hold until they see the response to the Wallace Complex installation. Instead, hall members may purchase condoms from the health center at 5 cents each and have a person who will from his room.

Dance tonight honors King, features worldwide music

By SALLY GILPIN Staff Writer

"Celebrating Diversity" is the theme of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration.

The celebration, organized by the Martin Luther King Jr. Committee, began Saturday with an art exhibit at the Purple Mall and will continue until Tuesday.

"I should be a lot of fun, dancin' and prancin' around." - Matt Kitterman KUOI Program Director

In addition to commemorating the life and work of Martin Luther King Jr., the celebration celebrates the unity of individuals pursuing a common ideal and the diversity among people.

According to co-chairwoman Michelle Ward, one of the best ways to celebrate diversity is to dance to music from around the world. The MLK Committee, KUOI-FM and the ASUI are co-sponsoring a community dance that will feature music from many countries. This is "music people probably have never heard," Ward said.

KUOI and local disc jockeys will play salsa, reggae, funk, African, soca and rai, which is from Algeria.

The dance will begin at 7 p.m. at the Moscow Community Center and will continue until midnight. It is free, but a $2 donation would be appreciated.

"It should be a lot of fun, dancin' and prancin' around," said Matt Kitterman, KUOI program director and a DJ for the dance. Another highlight of the celebration, the Candlelight March, will take place Monday. The march will start in Friendship Park at 6:15 p.m., proceed through downtown Moscow, and end at the SUB.

The Nez Perce Drummers and Flagstaff will perform a traditional ceremony before the march begins. Keynote speaker Bill Wassmuth, also will speak in the SUB Borah Theater after the march.

"We hope to have a couple hundred," Ward said, "but it's hard to tell how many we'll have since this is the first time we've done this." "We just want to celebrate King's idea of not holding people down for something irrelevant," Ward said.

Prichard to show progressive work

REVIEW BY JOE MCMICHAEL Staff Writer

Sloan, whose work includes everything from purely abstract to defined realism, is a graduate of the University of Idaho Master of Fine Arts program and has shown her art in New York City, San Francisco, Denver, Seattle, and other cities throughout the country.

Her work is also featured in several private and corporate collections. One of her oil paintings hangs at the main entrance of the Student Union Building.

Sloan uses all types of media in her work. Please see SLOAN page 8>

“..."She-Devil" not worth five bucks..."

Review by Sally Gilpin
Staff Writer

Five talented actors, a big budget and good direction can’t save a movie from a poor script. This was exactly what we had sitting through the film She-Devil. The basic premise of She-Devil is a woman who has had enough. "A less-than-beautiful housewife's husband leaves her for a romance novelist, and she decides to take revenge."

The film begins with a party that Streep is attending. When Barry and Beggary get into a fight, Beggary comes to the rescue and falls in love with Streep. Three things start to go downhill for the characters and for the movie. Beggary starts having an affair with Streep. Beggary learns about the affair and tries to win her husband back, but Beggary’s character ignores all her efforts and becomes more and more distant. Beggary’s character is a mean-spirited, one-dimensional character.

Although most of Streep’s lines are trite, I still enjoyed her performance. Her big move- ments are hysterical. In the funniest scene in the movie, Beggary draws her across the floor. Unfortunately, the funniest scene is also the most corny and Streep should have had more scenes like this one.

The rest of the actors seem to be able to deliver a good performance. Ed Begley Jr. plays the jerky husband and has some amusing facial expressions. When he first appears, Renée Zellweger looks like she is trying hard to hold her own with Streep, but eventually the two seem to have settled some way together.

She-Devil is extremely disappointing as a character’s movie and humorous movie. Instead I was irritated and out.$5.

her work, which includes oil paintings, woodcuts, prints and silk screen prints. “Sloan has been experimenting with the beginning with all types of media,” said gallery director Jeffrey Hays. Hays said the exhibit, arranged over 80 works, is “a good example of her work over the past 45 years.”

Looking at the art in order, from start to finish, allows a feel for both the individual work and the artist. While viewing works, personality begins permeating from the combination of abstract and realistic art in the same piece. This show is one that everyone will enjoy. One does not need to be an art major to enjoy the beauty of the work or the progression of talent throughout her career.

The show will be presented through Feb. The opening reception is Friday from 5 p.m. and is free for students and the general public.
Vandals rout Wolfpack

By RUSS BAGGIE
Sports Editor

Before a crowd of 4,800, the University of Idaho Vandal basketball team defeated the University of Nevada-Reno Wolfpack 92-73 Thursday night in what could be called an inconsistent game. The Vandals were outrebounded 38-25, but all five starters finished in double-digit scoring.

From the opening buzzer the Vandals came out smoking, scor- ing eight unanswered points. Forward Clifford Martin (17 points and six rebounds) and guard Otis Livingston (11 points and one rebound) scored six and four points respectively, in the first six minutes. The Vandals did not allow UNR to score for the first four minutes and 18 seconds.

UI soon rose to a 10-point lead (38-28) and appeared to be making a state- ment in regard to their loss to Montana State University last week.

The two teams battled back and forth, and the Vandals still led 28-18 with seven minutes remaining in the first half.

Then it was UNR’s turn. The Wolfpack went on a sur- prising nine-point run and did not allow the Vandals to score for more than four minutes and held UI to zero field goals for more than six minutes, but the Vandals finally stopped the cold spell when Martin sank two free throws and Caesar Prelow (13 points, three rebounds) hit a three-point shot. UI led 39-34 at halftime.

Suddenly the Vandals found themselves in a game, not a rout, and the crowd began wondering what Head Coach Kermit Davis had planned for the second half.

“I told the guys at halftime to go out and enjoy the game, and to play with confidence,” Davis said.

And play with confidence they did.

Although UNR came booming into the second half with two commanding runs by forward Matt Williams, it was not to be. The Vandals found their confi- dence and played their type of basketball for a full 10 minutes of the second half. With 9:30 left in the game, UI had a commanding 69-48 lead and never looked back.

3 - 1 Lady Vandals head to Montana

By DAYNA WILLIAMS

The women’s basketball team has a tough weekend on the road, with a game tonight against the University of Montana, and a game Saturday with Montana State University.

The Lady Vandals played six games during Christmas break and are 11-3 overall and 3-1 in the Big Sky Conference.

“Montana is 4-0 in the confer- ence, and they are a very good team this year,” said Head Coach Laurie Turner. “We are going to have to play really hard and work on defense to keep them from winning. It will be our toughest game of the weekend.”

Montana State is 5-3 in Big Sky play.

They have lost several games at home, so I think that we have a good chance,” Turner said.

“Thus is the toughest weekend in our schedule,” Turner said. “We would like to come home with both wins, but even if we only win one, we would still be in a good situation to win the Big Sky title.”

After this weekend, the Lady Vandals will play their next four out of five games at home. They have not lost a home game yet this season, so odds for success are in their favor.

“Our goal every year is to win the Big Sky Conference Champi- onship,” Turner said. “We need to be in the top four, and right now things are looking good for us and our goal.”

Now that upland bird and big game seasons have closed for another year, many outdoor enthusiasts turn their attention to the woods until Feb. 28 chasin rabbits.

The best time for rabbit and snowshoe hares. Cottonails can be found in much of the same habitat as upland birds. Hunting along brush draws, fence rows and brush piles is productive. Rabbits and snowshoes are extremely active in the mornings and evenings.

The long season offers other benefits, such as an opportunity to do some spring turkey scouting and to search for dropped deer and elk antlers and the main ingredient for Belgian rabbits.

THOMPSON, FRADY NATIONALLY RANKED.

Lady Vandals volleyball standout Karen Thompson and Kristy Frady finished the 1989 volleyball season ranked among the nation’s best, according to the American Volleyball Coaches Association. Thompson finished 14th in the nation in kills per game with a 4.79 average, and Frady was ranked 18th in blocks per game with a 1.58 average.

University breaks contract with author

By TRACY FEEL
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho has "terminated its working relationship" with the author contracted to write an academic and administrative history of the university. Historian John Shidler was contracted to write the book in 1986, but since that time university officials have become dissatisfied with Shidler's efforts.

"The work was coming late and, in my opinion, it wasn't up to University of Idaho standards," said Hal Godwin, acting president of student affairs. His opinion was verified by two historians. Shidler has filed for a Chapter 11 bankruptcy, and Godwin speculates that his financial problems may have impaired his ability to write a high-quality history. UI hasn't abandoned plans to publish a history of the university, but Godwin says, they must first recover research materials.

"He has all the files, tapes and records he used to compile his manuscript," Godwin said. "We think the university owes these materials since he was under contract to us.

The university hopes to enter arbitration with Shidler to recover these primary sources. According to Godwin, the university is not obligated to fulfill its part of the contract because Shidler did not fulfill his.

UI lunch and learn seminars continue "Changing Times: Latin America" is the theme of the continuing International Lunch and Learn Seminar Series at the University of Idaho this spring. Three seminars have been scheduled for the spring semester. The first program on Tuesday, Jan. 23, will feature Sister Andrea Nenzel, currently Province Leader for the Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace in Bellevue, Wash.

Nenzel spent more than two years as the co-director of the Calle Real Refugee Camp in El Salvador and has made frequent trips back since that time. She was a colleague of Father Amado Lopez, one of the six Catholic priests slain in El Salvador in November, 1989.

A native Canadian, Nenzel did her undergraduate work at Seattle University and received her M.A. in Mathematics from the University of Oregon. She has taught high school in Seattle and Wenatchee and was a school principal in two Alaska cities. In addition to her congregation responsibilities, Nenzel has been co-director of Mission Project Service in New York and is a member of the Steering Committee for the Washington State "Going Home" project.

The subject of her presentation will be her personal experience and understanding of the situations in El Salvador and Central America.

"I will speak from my stance as a Christian, trying to responsibly respond to a situation of blatant injustices in our world and time of complex economic and political realities," Nenzel said. The second program on Thursday, Feb. 15, will focus on "The Nicaraguan Electoral Process." Dr. Dennis West, UI professor of foreign language and literatures will report on his observations in the pre-election process in Nicaragua.

The series will conclude on Tuesday, March 27, with a panel of UI Latin American studies. Dr. Dan Greenough, UI Professor of History, will moderate the panel discussion entitled "Main Street Latin America and U.S. Policies.

The brown bag seminar series is held from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. in the UCC, Rm. 112. All programs are free and open to the public. The UI International Affairs Committee and the International Trade and Development Office are sponsoring the program.
