Chemistry Journal Describes
Research on Anodyne

A recent editor of the journal of the American Chemical Society has written an article by J. H. Reed, professor of chemistry at the University of Idaho, who has been working with Dr. C. J. Rankin and Dr. C. J. Rankin of the University of Idaho, on the effects of temperature on the properties of a certain type of anodine. The research has been conducted at the University of Idaho, and the results have been published in the journal.

The paper describes the research work which was done on the University of Idaho. It gives an account of the work done by J. H. Reed and much of the laboratory and field data collected during the course of the research work.

However, the results have been confirmed by Dr. C. J. Rankin at the University of Idaho. The research has been confirmed by Dr. C. J. Rankin at the University of Idaho. Squinteye Says

HELLO EVERYBODY:

I’m sorry I have not been able to write my usual column as yet. I was too busy with something else recently. I have been working on a few projects and have been traveling around quite a bit. I will try to get back to my usual writing soon.

To The Editor:

I am writing to express my concern about a recent incident that occurred in the city. It seems that the local government has failed to take proper action to address the problem. The situation has gotten worse over time and I believe that something must be done.

I would like to see more effective measures taken to prevent such incidents from happening in the future. The community needs to come together and work towards a solution. I hope that the authorities will take this matter seriously and take appropriate action.

Sincerely,

Always a jump, whether they are calling sporty or not, the athletes will be there. And if they ever get to a farther they will be in a jamboree on Christmas. There are too many teams. This is a very good season.

The difference in personalities is very marked. The Eastern students are new to the game, but they're pretty good. It always amazes me how good these students are in the class.
