Pro-choice rally set for Sunday

By STEPHANIE BAILEY

The Moscow Chapter of National Organization of Women (NOW) and the Latah County Freedom Means Choice (FM) are sponsoring a pro-choice rally Sunday, Oct. 28 at 3:30 p.m. at East City Park in Moscow.

Speakers will include Larry LaRocco, First Congressional Candidate, Rev. Mike Burr, pastor of the United Church in Moscow and Nancy Shaffer, UI student and activist. Pro-choice candidates from Latah county and its fraternal district and candidates from Idaho running for national Senate and Congress seats have also been asked to attend.
OUTDOOR CENTER SALES AND SWAPS. The UI Outdoor Program will hold a swap from 1-3 p.m. at the Agricultural Building on the campus. All students are invited to sell or swap equipment and clothing. The proceeds will go toward the Outdoor Program fund.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY WORKSHOP SET. The workshop will feature Richard Kaustlerich, Director of the European Community Affairs Office, U.S. Department of State and Marc Chirac, the Consul General of France. The workshop will be held Monday, Nov. 4, at the Institute of International Affairs.

SLIDE PRESENTATION SCHEDULED. "End of the Timber Frontier," a slide-illustrated presentation by Dr. John Osborn, coordinator for the Inland Empire Lands Council, will be presented Monday, Oct. 26, at 7 p.m. at the Moscow Community Center.

CHEMISTRY CONFERENCE HELD. A Chemical Careers Insight conference will be held Saturday, Nov. 2. The conference will be held at the Idaho State University, 7 a.m.-5 p.m.

SMYSER VISITS CAMPUS. G.O.P. candidate for Congress 1st District, Skip Smyser, will be at Friendship Square tomorrow night, 7 p.m. The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity will be holding a welcome back to school party.

LAST DAY TO REGISTER TO VOTE. Today is the last day to register to vote in the general election. The deadline is 5 p.m. at the County Clerk's Office in the Court House on 6th St. between Adams and Van Buren.

The University of Idaho’s commitment to undergraduate education was the topic of concern at a meeting Wednesday between Thomas Bell, vice president of academic and research, various department representatives and the ASUI senate.

According to Bell, the university’s current recognition in important circles, including its top 200 rating among universities and colleges by U.S. News and World Report as well as various departmental awards, have contributed to the recruitment and maintenance of top students at the university.

“Tamar very proud of the student, very proud of the university, very proud to be affiliated,” Bell said.

Bell credited various instructors for these “good news items,” including Professor-Dave Thomas, director of the English language lab with the “idea of helping students English skills.”

Hughett also praised “quality faculty and course offerings” across the university.

In other senate business, a bill allowing for the removal of the Student Body Association from the ASUI to create a separate financial and political organization was approved and passed on to the Board of Regents for final approval. Sen. Julie McCray requested that the vote be postponed for one week in order for senators to meet with their “living groups, but her request was overruled.”

P. Thomas Adams was appointed to one of the two vacant positions on the senate. Sen. Adams will represent Farm House, Lambda Chi Alpha and Houston Hall, as well as serving on the Academic Board and on the Rules and Regulations Committee.

Other senate appointments included Bill Broaddus as ASUI Lobbyist, Robert Pippin to the Recreation Advisory Board, Kara Thomas to the Finance Board and Sarah Cunningham to the SUB Board.

Fairchild using his values to make public decisions

It was a big step...followed by a big flop.

Last week Republican Gubernatorial candidate Roger Fairchild stopped by campus to meet with students and student leaders. While on campus he became a member of a small group—someone whom limits student fees are actually tuition in disguise, and as such, unconstitutional in the state of Idaho.

Great! Elect that man to the governorship.

But wait just a minute—what did he say next? He would like to see a student lawsuit challenging the fees?

Oops.

Shouldn't a possible governor do everything in his power to prevent costly lawsuits from being filed against his state? As a candidate for the state's highest office, shouldn't he be able to come up with some other solution short of encouraging students to sue?

As the governor, he would be given the power to execute the provisions of the constitution. He would also be the man who proposes a budget to the legislature. As the most powerful man in the state, shouldn't Fairchild be able to avoid a lawsuit?

But maybe this is no surprise that he would not care about the costs of a lawsuit.

Afterall, this is the man who would have signed last spring's anti-abortion legislation into law "in a baby's heartbeat."

That legislation, if you remember correctly, would have guaranteed Idaho a very conservative constitutional lawsuit—one which many speculated Idaho would lose.

It is obvious that Fairchild does not look beyond his personal convictions when making political decisions.

It is noble that he is willing to declare fees tuition. It is his own personal right to feel the costs of a lawsuit, even in the case of rape, immoral.

However, it would not be his right as governor to subject the state of Idaho to the costs of his personal beliefs.

It is obvious that the citizens of the state of Idaho can not afford to elect Roger Fairchild as our governor.

Get your Greek gripes out about SAS, probation

Editor's note: Dennis Charnay is the Daily Collegian's greek advisor.

So some poor dumb schmuck wandered onto the lawn of your Greek house last Friday night and really caused a ruckus? Of course he was undergraduate and severely intoxicated at the time.

Dennis Charnay

Guest Opinion

But the story doesn't end there, does it? No way. It just so happened that he was out there, whooping and hollering until he had lost so much air that the bell in the sit-down position next to the sidewalk. It's dark, and through an alcohol induced opiate, he had disoriented women walking down the sidewalk talking to him. He thinks they wonder—will they like him, will they be impressed? Of course they will.

The women approach, and pass. Just as they do, our hero makes his move and gives each a good squeeze on the bum.

"They're impressed now," he thinks to himself, as the two beat him up the head and face. The excitement is too much. He passes out backwards, face to the sky.

The vomit begins to gurgle forth from his mouth like blue-skies grower. It flows down his chin, on to his clavicle and around to the back of his neck. It is there that the droplets and chunks collect, dripping down and leaving a yellowish substance on the pure white, freshly fallen snow.

Unfortunately for your house, our hero has just pitched the rump. At the friendly campus prosecutor and the police of Linna Wilson (Nancy's buddy) the Greek Advisor. Wouldn't you know it, but the story never disappeared so whole house is on probation. Sure, the guy should be in trouble for his act, but not to even member of your house. Why should you suffier for the wrongs committed by others? Meanwhile, Linda has promised that if all you are good for these months, she will be granted permission to rent "The Little Mermaid" and not a popcorn on some special Friday night next February. You groan, you moan. How could you be so harsh? She could at least let us rent "Buccs."

Had enough? OK, I'll get to the point. The Greeks take too much guff from Student Advisory Services. A variety of you have come to me with complaints concerning the handling of disciplinary matters by that office. Most of your complaints are understandable, but SAS is almost powerless to impose sanctions upon your individual houses or even places you on probation.

That is generally left up to those higher up in your particular organization. However, SAS still feels the responsibility and is trying to throw their broomsticks' insubordinate throw to their broomstick in your spokes. The Greek Advisor gets wind of the fact that there was BIER at one of your parties and all hell broke loose. She sticks her thumbs in her belt and chants in a slow southern draw—"What we got here is a violation. A think AAU's up authority and do something about that." Then WHAM—the house is on probation.

I want to hear your complaints, but I want them in an organized fashion. On Tuesday, Nov. 6, I would like three selected representatives from each interested house to come to the Greek Grievance Session in the SUB Ballroom at 1:30 p.m. The Greens are sometimes like that. I will listen to your grpires and take them to SAS hopefully, I will be able to solve these problems or find out where they get the mystical authority to do what they do.

This is your chance. Be like Dee Snyder of Twisted Sister—"Don't take it anymore." Come to the Grievance Session and we'll try to remedy the wrong.

Rally to protect legalized abortion

Editor's note: This letter is being re-run as the date of the rally was mistated due to a typing error.

Editor:

As the fight for legalized abortion continues, the citizens of the Moscow vicin-yety are once again planning together to protect a woman's right to choose.

On Sunday, Oct. 28 at 1:30 p.m., there will be a pro-choice rally in East City Park sponsored by the local chapters of Freedom Means Choice and the National Organization for Women.

Guest speakers include First Congressional Candidate Larry Laffocco and the Reverend Mike Burr of Moscow.

Several pro-choice candidates from around the state have also been invited to speak at the rally and visit with the public.

Music will be provided for your listening enjoyment by local folk singer Harvey-Marone.

We invite you to take part in an entertaining afternoon and to help support a woman's most fundamental right—her right to choose.

As a college student, I especially encourage my generation to join us in the rally. We are the future, and we must fight for this fundamental legalized abortion.

Censor bar not solving problem

Editor:

All official student communication media shall have the right to establish and maintain internal control of contents. Such content, free from censorship. Only for proper and stated causes will editors and managers be subject to removal, and only then by procedures prescribed at a prior date, (emphasis added).—From the Statement of Student Rights, Section II Freedom of Inquiry and Expression.

What does this paragraph mean to you, Paulie? After reading your letter to the editor, I must assume that you think as the "publishing agency" you can review contents as needed. However, 6130.01, Rules and Regulations say that the responsibility of "de facto publisher is given to the Communications Board." While you cited Rules and Regulations 6130.01 because it says that the Communications Board is the "publish-lishing agency," why didn't you also cite 6130.08 which was one inch below 6130.01? I know why, it is because those words would mean that you cannot control content; which is exactly what you did last Tuesday night.

The Communications Board's decision to put a censor bar on the photo was a violation of student rights, a violation of the Rules and Regulations, and it was even a violation of the Communications Board's proposed rules. In each case you ignore the same simple message just because you are the "publishing agency." I suppose you would have the Communications Board decide when review was needed, also.

You would say all this control over content exists simply because the Communications Board is the "publishing agency." I don't know—what I do know is that content is left to the media.

I would agree that it is not entirely clear, from the Rules and Regulations and the workable Communications Board by-laws from last year, exactly who does have control over content, but the Smyser vows to be in touch with constituents

Editor: Congressional candidate Skip Smyser was at the University of Idaho Oct. 17 visiting the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity. He had just arrived from Boise where Vice President Dan Quayle had thrown a fund raising banquet on his behalf. While at the house, the Republican candidate fielded questions ranging from "Why are you running for Congress?" to "What should we do with the Middle East situation?"

Smyser told the gathering that he was qualified for the position because of his 10 years in the state legislature, his experience as a prosecuting attorney and his extensive dealings with subjects such as education, senior citizens and agriculture. He was particularly interested in taking his knowledge concerning the budget process back to Washington, D.C.

Smyser told the group that in order to be successful as Idaho's representative he would need to be in touch with his constituency.

To accomplish this goal, he stated that he would be in Moscow on a "frequent basis." He would establish a mobile office which would allow him to better hear the people that do not live in cities that have a permanent office.

Statement of Student Rights is a plain guarantee of internal control for the media. To correct the problem guidelines do not exist, hopefully they will prevent the Communications Board from overstepping its power and trampling on Student Rights in the future. 6130.080 of the Rules and Regulations states that you are responsible for the pictures listed in Section 6100.001 through 6100.007. At no place within those sections is there the power to censor the photos by insisting that there be censor bars on them. I hope that there are enough students concerned about the censorship being committed on this campus that any attempts to change the by-laws giving the Board unjustified power will be stopped.

The most disturbing aspect of this particular exercise of censorship is that the administration is behind the whole thing. If it doesn't bother you that Hal Godwin is even remotely connected to the pictures being censored, than you shouldn't be on the Communications Board. From your letter it appears that Hal Godwin attempted to persuade at least Jill Beck and you that the pictures should be censored. I have heard that he attempted to persuade anybody he could, until he found someone who was willing to share his puritan concern that frontal nude male photos in poor taste were going to be printed in the Gem. I would agree that you and the administration think alike, you are both very uptight, approval of censorship and feel that censorship will remedy the perceived problem. The only thing that was censored was a penis (I must admit, I am nervous even typing the word.) At least half of the UI population has seen their own penis, the other half probably has at least seen one in health class. If there are any students that have never seen a penis, then the picture should be printed as is for educational purposes. This is supposed to be the age of enlightenment, yet teenage pregnancies continue to rise, the number of AIDS victims continues to increase, and sexually transmitted disease continues to spread. Paula, do you and Hal Godwin think that putting a black bar over the nasty thing will make all penises disappear?

Living groups host kids for spook day

By JILL CASTLE
Contributing Writer

If you’re looking for some safe and fun activities for your kids or yourself to participate in this Halloween season, you won’t have to look any farther than the University of Idaho campus living groups.

On Halloween Eve starting at 7 p.m., Sigma Chi fraternity will offer pumpkin carving for the children of Friends Unlimited. The members of Sigma Chi dress in their favorite costumes and help the kids carve pumpkins. Children attending are encouraged to wear a costume also.

This annual event then progresses on to the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, where children are taken through a haunted house put together by the chapter. Finally, the event ends at the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, where the kids can indulge in Halloween treats.

“Our house has been holding a pumpkin carve for about the last 10 years,” said Sigma Chi Chris Winterich. “It gives us a chance to help out the Moscow community while getting into the Halloween spirit.”

Tower Trick or Treat is an event offered to the public on Halloween night and it is free. Sponsored by the residents of Theophilus Towers, an evening of trick-or-treating, haunted houses and refreshments is offered.

Donations for the event were collected from several campus clubs and organizations, area businesses, greek houses and residence halls this year. According to Delaynia King, a resident adviser at Theophilus Tower, donations this year have increased tremendously compared to last year.

“Last year we were forced to make emergency runs to the store for more candy,” King said. She added that this year they should have more than enough candy for the anticipated 500 kids.

Tower Trick or Treat begins at 5 p.m. on Halloween and will last until 7:30 p.m. Children 12 and under are welcome, and refreshments will be provided for parents while they wait.

The celebration of All Hallows' Eve, a solemn vigil of the past, has lost all aspects of serious worship and the customs surrounding it have adopted a new orientation toward community service. According to Mayrinne R. Krythe's "All About Halloween," in Moscow, the celebration of All Hallows' Eve was a festival for the mighty sun god. Druid priests held great rituals in honor of the god and performed human sacrifices to appease the restless lord of death.

Pestant folk spent many a Hallowe'en night locked inside, seeking protection from the trick-or-treaters and ghosts. Because All Hallow's Eve was considered the night when the spirit world was alive and active, some brave individuals attempted to predict their futures with the help of wandering spirits.

Questions concerning a future spouse, the possibility of wealth and good fortune and impending death were asked of the spirits. According to "The American Book of Days" by Jane M. Haddock, the planting of hemp seed on Hallowe'en would determine the future mate. The idea was to take a handful of seed and sow it in the earth while reciting the rhyme:

"Hempseed, I saw thee
Hempseed, I saw thee again
And her is to be true love
Cove two and draw thee.

The sower would then glance over his shoulder and see the image of his love reaping hemp behind him.

For the first four days of November, farmers celebrated Hallowe'en with taffy pullis, hayrides and costume dressing.

Pumpkin carving became a popular fall-time activity in the United States after the Irish introduced their tradition of carving jack-o-lantern faces out of oversized turnips, rutabagas and potatoes.

 Foolish pranks and trickery became a common practice on All Hallow's Eve and was often blamed on mischievous spirits. Eventually, civic and social groups tried to channel the mischievous energy expended by overzealous trick or treaters into safer, more productive means of entertainment.

In 1990, children began trick or treating to raise money for UNICEF, United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, asking for monetary donations instead of sweets.

Community sponsored Hallowe'en parties, parades and haunted houses were initiated all across the United States.

Some sociologists believe that All Hallow's Eve has lost the folk vitality of black magic, fortune telling and superstition and thus, is a dying holiday. Although Hallowe'en has lost some of its mysticism, it has gained a new foundation in community activity.

This basis of community service is more evident in Moscow this year. Several local organizations will be celebrating Hallowe'en with fund-raisers and charity events.

The Moscow Downtown Association is holding its second annual haunted house on Oct. 31 from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. at 820 East B St. in the Old Jesse Randall House, a Latah County Historical sight.

The cost is $1 donation with the proceeds going to the Moscow Downtown Association, which is a nonprofit organization. With three levels of terror, it is a haunted house for all ages.

Targhee Hall is also sponsoring a haunted house as an annual charity event. Admission is $2 and the proceeds go to the Washington Star Foundation, an organization that helps terminally ill youth.

The haunted house is located on the corner of Blaine and Taylor and open on Oct. 31 from 8 p.m. to midnight.

The Kappa Epilon fraternity will be presenting their 15th annual haunted house for charity.

Still rocking America even after break-up

By Jay Foreman Staff Writer

In 1986, Night Ranger was big. Their album Midnight Madness had spawned two top ten singles, with "Sister Christian" and "When You Close Your Eyes," and they were flying. When 1985 rolled in they released another couple of good songs off of 7 Wishes, and then something happened. The music scene changed.

Heavy metal started to gain major attention. Bands like Night Ranger found themselves out of luck. Night Ranger was not alone; Journey, Survivor, and other melodic rock bands fell from the same sky that Night Ranger did.

After 7 Wishes, Night Ranger released two more albums, but it wasn’t the same. The airplay was no longer there for them. The problem that Night Ranger faced was the fact that the public perceived them as a ballad band. The public was wrong, and in 1990, Night Ranger Live in Japan proves this point wrong even further.

Night Ranger was Jack Blades, who plays in the Damn Yankees now, and if you don’t have their album, shame on you. Jeff Watson and Brad Gillis shared the guitar duties, and Kelly Keagy played the drums. Night Ranger was quite the band to see live. Blades’ energy provided a lot of fire.

On the live album, that thought prevails. "Touch of Madness" from Midnight Madness starts the album off with a good piece of rock and roll. This song is an example of NR’s ability to rock. This song, about a girl that nobody can control, is cool. It’s always been cool.

Next, Blades tells a little story about what happens "When You Close Your Eyes." This song is just as good live as it was on the radio. It’s a classic.

Two songs off of NR’s last studio album, Man In Motion follow. (Man In Motion is also a highly recommended album.) These are great songs, no matter if NR was left behind.

The acoustic part of the record comes next, with three straight acoustic songs, including "Goodbye," a great song off of 7 Wishes. These songs are cool because they showcase Keagy and Blades’ style of singing. You can’t touch the talent in this band.

"Four In The Morning" comes next. This 1980 song was about not being able to live with or without your lover. It is cool because Blades uses the edge in his voice to his best advantage here.

Probably all of the songs Night Ranger has done, "Sister Christian" is the most well known. The acoustics in Japan must be damn good, because the song comes out almost perfect. This ballad is one that will be remembered, live or otherwise.

After the sister becomes Christian, NR performs their first song (or single) ever. "Don’t Tell Me You Love Me." This is a rock- er through and through, and it is added to by Blades playing with the crowd a bit. The guitars in the song are not to be stopped or stopped.

Another song off of Man In Motion, and NR closes their twelve song set with "You Can Still Rock In America," yes another example of how little recognition Night Ranger got for what they could do. It’s a great way to end things.

Night Ranger has broken up and this is it, baby. But they should be remembered for what they could do so we could do it again and roll. This is as good a live album as any other out there, the songs are enhanced here. That’s what a live album should be about.

This is their farewell album, and watch how many different bands are formed out of this group. We already have The Damn Yankees, and Kelly Keagy has formed a new group called Emotional Wrecks, which will be out next year.

Night Ranger broke up because they were forgotten in the music scene. A mistake that you may realize when you listen to this live example of what it takes to be a great band.

Vandals dominate Cougars

By JOE MALLE
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho women's volleyball team went to Pullman, Tuesday night, with revenge on their minds and came home with the satisfaction of knocking Washington State University in front of a Cougar home crowd of over 800 fans.

The Vandals won the match in three games scoring 15-9, 16-14 and 15-12. Idaho lost to WSU in Memorial gym earlier this season in three games, so this victory was especially sweet, although it was a non-conference contest.

The Vandals played extremely accurate ball Tuesday night as they combined for a season high hitting percentage of .412 compared to the .225 Cougar percentage. Idaho also outblocked WSU 10 to 8. While the Cougars were lackluster, Idaho played a match that showed what a strong and well organized team they have become.

Karen Thompson led the Vandals with a team high 20 kills, while also managing to provide a .563 hitting percentage (her best this season), two service aces and two blocking.

Stacey Asplund continued her strong play hitting 10 kills, a team high. .563 kill percentage and four blocks. Heather McIwen and Nancy Wicks both had over 200 percent. Wicks had 8 kills, five service aces and 4 blocks, and McIwen had 9 kills. True-freshman Dee Porter, in her usually consistent form, led Idaho with 9 digs.

"We are controlling the ball better," Vandal head coach Tom Hillbert said. "We had our best team hitting percentage since we have been here. We were remarkably consistent."

Idaho extended its current winning streak to seven matches and raised their overall record to 13-15 with this victory.

Idaho is currently fifth in the Big Sky standings, and to earn a berth to post season play, they must be one of the top four teams in the BSC. Of their last six matches that remain in regular season play, five of the six are against the top four ranked teams in the Big Sky, and all of them are against conference opponents.

Tonight, Idaho plays third ranked University of Montana in Memorial gym at 7:00, and Saturday, they compete against Montana State in another home match.

Both Montana teams have defeated Idaho on the road earlier this year and both are definitely capable of doing it again this weekend. Idaho has developed into a much stronger team now than when they lost those two matches, but the Montana schools are still capable of beating the Vandals if the Vandals have a down day.

A pair of conference wins now would make Idaho's position a lot more comfortable right now, and they have a possible loss against top ranked Idaho State University or second ranked Boise State in the next few weeks. Otherwise, Idaho will face the difficult task of winning their last four matches.

If Idaho was ever in a position to pull off some new and exciting magic, however, this is the year. "We are right where we want to be," Hillbert said. "We are healthy, and we are playing well. If our kids want it, we can do it."

"We'll be fired up Friday," Hillbert said. "These are really important matches, and the Montana match will set the pace for Saturday."

Regardless of the outcome, Memorial gym will be the sight of some great volleyball this weekend.

Red-shirt year gives Henderson a new perspective

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Staff Writer

You take the hand-off. You've told really, with a to go because there is no particular play called. So you just run for survival and hope you don't get killed by the 11 blood thirsty defenders about to rip your head off. Sound a little crazy? It might be, but that is one way to describe the life of the red-shirt.

The life of being a scout team red-shirt is never easy. A player goes from being a high school back to nothing more than an unrecognized tackling dummy for the first team defense. It's hard enough for an 18-year-old freshman to deal with his new environment and studies, but now he has to be able to deal with a new coaching staff and a far from easy playing situation.

One of the freshmen going through this is running back Wind Henderson. Wind is six foot, 190 pounds from Cherry Creek High School outside of Denver. Wind was a second team All-State performer as a senior when he picked up over 1,400 yards rushing. But that was then and this is now. This year Henderson is relegated to assimilating the other team each week in practice. Wind, however, keeps it all in perspective.

"At first I was really depressed," Wind said from his dorm room. "It takes all the fun out because you have no games to look forward to. Now I look at it as a chance to improve myself and refine my abilities.

"Wind has handled it very well," Defensive Tackle and Scout Team coach Mike Cox said. "He's done a good job accepting the role. At times this year he's given us a better look at practice than we've had in games."

When Wind first arrived at Idaho he looked as if he might battle for some playing time, or even start. But with the emergence of Devon Pearson and Roman Carter the Vandals coaching staff has decided to make Wind wait his turn. Pearson, who is having an outstanding season, will be back next year for his senior year, so Wind will have to battle just to get playing time.

"All I want to do is get some playing time my senior year," Henderson said. "When I transferred high schools it took me six games to break into the starting line-up so I know how to compete.

Henderson says he gets his competitive edge from his father who played college football at Colorado State and then four years in the NFL with the Redskins and Steelers. Henderson's dad provides Wind with inspiration and a good role model.

"My dad doesn't put too much pressure on me," Wind said. "He really helps me with the mental aspects of football. He gives good advice and then lets me make my own decisions."

It didn't take too much advice when it came to picking a college. Henderson took a trip to Wyoming but Idaho was the only school that offered him a scholarship.

"My father says when you go to college to play football that you are just a kid," Henderson said. "But I really think that at Idaho they are really cut for my best interests. My parents are just glad that I'm going to college."

Henderson represents the future of Idaho football. With his quick feet and outstanding vision Henderson has the chance for a great career.

"I feel to be a great back I need to get a lot stronger," Henderson said. "I don't want to gain weight and lose quickness, just get stronger."

"It's tough right now on Wind because being a scout team is not very glamorous, but he has the chance to be one of the best backs to have played here at Idaho," Cox added.
