Large Vibrating Motor Leased to College of Engineering

A 960-pound vibrating motor, leased to the College of Engineering, has been installed in the laboratory at the University of Idaho to ensure proper balance and operation of the motor. The motor will be used for various experiments in the college's mechanical engineering program.

Professor J. C. Clark, who supervised the installation, said that the motor was selected because of its large size and power, which will allow for accurate and reliable readings. The motor will be used for testing various components and systems, including those used in the automobile industry.

Visiting Home Economics Expert Suggests New Major Field for Co-eds’ Study

Miss Dorothy Dean gives New Farmer-Consumer Course to Argonaut Interviewer

Miss Dorothy Dean, head of the University of Idaho’s department of home economics, was the guest of the Argonaut’s home economics class last week. The class heard Miss Dean discuss the need for a new major field within the field of home economics.

Miss Dean suggested that a new major field, called “food science,” should be established at the University of Idaho. She explained that this field would focus on the scientific aspects of food, including nutrition, food chemistry, and food technology.

Miss Dean also discussed the importance of food science in today’s world, where there is a growing concern about the health implications of the food we eat.

She added that a major in food science would provide students with the knowledge and skills needed to work in the food industry, including in research, product development, and quality control.

Miss Dean’s visit was part of a new course on food science that will be offered at the University of Idaho next semester.

The Argonaut’s home economics class was very interested in Miss Dean’s presentation and they are looking forward to the new food science course.

Oregon State Takes Two-Game Series With Vandal Hoopmen

Oregon State made a strong start in their defense of title in the Mountain States, with a solid 27-26 victory in the first game. This was followed by a win of 28-19 in the second game. The Vandal hoopers did not play as well in the second game, with their defense breaking down towards the end. However, Oregon State's offense continued to work well, especially on the boards. The Vandals struggled to keep up with the fast-paced game. The final score was 75-61 in favor of the Beavers. The next game against the Vandals will be an exciting match to see how the Vandal hoopers will respond.
