Rhodes: a test for applicants and judges

By Kristi Nelson
Staff Writer

Before 1939, the University of Idaho had produced more winners of one of the most prestigious scholarships in America than any other school except the Ivy League universities. Then suddenly, the streak ended ... and Idaho's 46-year long dry spell continues.

Rhodes Scholarships have been awarded annually to 32 Americans since 1902. According to Marvin Henberg, secretary of the state selection committee, applicants are chosen on the basis of intellectual attainment, physical vigor, leadership, and qualities of character. The University of Idaho applicants are not lacking these attributes, but seem not to have presented the judges with the right combination of qualifications at the right time.

"We get some remarkably able young people," said Kent Hackmann, chairman of the history department and Rhodes Scholar Advisor. "The way you measure success is whether or not you've put your best foot forward.

Available to students of any major, the scholarship was established by Oxford Alumnus Cecil Rhodes, who amassed a fortune in diamonds as a British colonist in his former namesake country of Rhodesia, now called Zimbabwe. Rhodes wasn't interested in "mere bookworms" as he said in his will. Rather, he wanted academically outstanding students who were also motivated, well-rounded leaders capable of using their experience to better themselves and mankind.

"When somebody is going to get a Rhodes scholarship," said Hackmann, "it's going to be somebody who's a self-starter, who's charted his course."

A former Rhodes scholar himself, Henberg agrees that the candidates must be adventurous to be considered.

"Rhodes Scholars aren't selected for being wallflowers," he said. "If the students are going out and doing other things, have leadership, they have a chance."

Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 24, unmarried, and have a bachelors degree prior to their commencement of classes at Oxford. Such a prestigious award understandably requires a long selection process. Hackmann first speaks with each interested individual to assess their qualifications and to exchange information.

"Part of my task is to be up front with reality," he explained.

Then the students who still saw an interest to applying complete a application form by October 15 and return it to Hackmann. The requirements include writing a "soul-searching" personal essay, he said. Hackmann critiques the essays, and the applicants then meet with a UI committee. This committee recommends whether or not the students should submit their applications to the state selection committee, which holds interviews in Boise in December.

Last year 14 UI students showed an initial interest in the program, said Hackmann. None of the four UI students who eventually interviewed in Boise were selected as the two students to represent Idaho at the district elimination.

The United States is divided into 8 districts for this process, with each state being allocated two candidates. Idaho is part of the least populated district, which includes 6 other Northwestern states. Henberg has served on this district's selection committee for the past seven years.

Four scholars are chosen in December from each district by committee members who are appointed by the Rhodes Trust. The 32 Americans begin classes at Oxford in October of the following year, joining about 38 other Rhodes scholars from 13 British Commonwealth countries and West Germany.

The scholarship's specification that allows candidates to apply from their home state or from a state in which they have attended a university for two years can present problems for Idaho applicants. That is, candidates from Idaho's state universities can be competing against students from Ivy League schools and other prestigious private institutions.

"Our biggest problem is how do you compare a student with a 4.0 from Harvard with a student with a 4.0 from the University of Montana?" Henberg said. Thus the "cordial but exhaustive and terrible" interviews the candidates are subjected to acquire an extreme importance.

"One of the most effective ways is to put them under pressure and probe," Henberg said. "You have to put them on the spot and have them defend their ideas. After ten minutes you can find out what they do know, and the rest of the time you find out how they think."

Hackmann, who earned his undergraduate degree at Yale, believes students who attend a school with a highly competitive

Senator taps ASUI with budget cuts

By Laurel Darrow
Stall Winter

The ASUI senate cut $15,000 from its budget and gave $1,000 to the Nightline Support Service at the Wednesday night meeting.

Senators also discussed "financial matters" in an executive session. Vice President Mike Smith said after the meeting that the senators discussed budgeting problems.

The senators were "informed of some things that have happened" and that they might want to consider budgeting for next year, Trail said. He has called a special senate session to discuss the ASUI's fiscal situation today at 3:30 p.m. in the Rossett Room in the basement of the SUB. The meeting is open to the public.

At the meeting Wednesday, the senate cut $15,000 from its budget to take care of the ASUI's $15,000 shortfall. It occurred because fewer students registered this semester than had been expected.

According to the bill passed by the senate, the president's account will be cut $1,500; the ASUI attorney general, $833; student radio KOUU, $820; Lecture Notes, $875. The remaining amount, $6,006 will be taken from the general reserve account, leaving less than $14,000 in that account.

The senate also decided to donate $1,800 to Nightline, a telephone service that offers help to troubled people.

Last year the service took calls from people who were troubled about abortions, alcohol, anxiety, depression, interpersonal relationships and other problems. The service also received 32 suicide calls.

Nightline requested $2,000, but senators said they did not want to donate that much because of the ASUI's budget problems.

"We should give more," said Sen. Rich Ruck. But he added that the ASUI cannot afford to give more.

Gary Lindberg, president pro-tempore of the senate, pointed out that with the senate's donation and a $440 donation from the ASUI Academic Board, Nightline will be $650 short of its goal.

Film festival posts language skills

With plans for a major film festival, high school workshops and campus-wide education, the UI's first foreign language week promises to be filled with activities for virtually everyone, organizers of the event promise.

The brainchild of the student foreign language group, the University Language and Culture Association (ULCA), the week is planned as a learning experience, both for high school students and students of the UI.

According to Joan West, assistant professor of foreign languages and literatures, "the purpose of foreign language week is to help students become more proficient in the language they are studying." The only languages which will be used in the week's activities are French, Spanish and German, although the UI also offers instruction in Latin and Greek.

Gov. John V. Evans has declared the week of March 3-9 as foreign language week in Idaho, and said, "There is a great need for Americans to understand international matters, to develop appreciation for other cultures, and to encourage the study of language.

Over 200 students from northern Idaho and eastern Washington are expected to attend the North Idaho Foreign Language Festival tomorrow, March 2. The high school students will hear a scavenger hunt, poetry recitations, skits and an art session. West said students will be grouped with others in the same French-speaking group. They will be divided according to the language they are involved with, and festival activities will be in their particular foreign language," she said. "For the scavenger hunt, we'll give them a list of things they have to find, but the list will be in their foreign language. In the skit competition, students will have a list of foreign vocabulary words, and will have a certain amount of time to prepare an impromptu skit."

The rest of the foreign language week will be devoted to a foreign film festival on the UI campus. All films will be shown at 7 p.m. in room 326 of the Administration Building.

Young Torless, in German with English subtitles, will be shown Sunday, March 3. Based on the novel by Robert Musil, the film was made in 1966.

The second film, I Am Josef, which is German with Spanish subtitles, will be shown Monday, March 4.

According to West, "It's an exciting week, and we're hoping students will take advantage of the opportunities available to them." The week of March 6-10, the UI also will host a foreign language symposium.

Certainly the most ambitious event of the week will be the Friday evening Foreign Film Festival. An all-campus film festival, to be shown in the Student Union and three other campus locations.

According to Joan East, director of the Film Festival, the festival will feature a wide variety of films from around the world. There will also be a foreign language festival, to be held in the Student Union and three other campus locations.

KUOI gets bad survey results

By Laurel Darrow

Staff Writer

Student radio KUOI-FM isn't worth what it costs, according to 50 students who responded to an unscientific survey by ASUI Sen. David Doze.

"I'm looking for a quick way to make $20,000, guys. KUOI got a lot of negative comments," Doze told students at their meeting Wednesday night. Doze said he received 50 responses from students living at Alpha Chi Omega sorority and French, Graham and Hays residence halls.

The purpose of the survey was to determine the relative importance of students place on certain ASUI programs.

Students were asked to rate the programs on a scale from 1 to 6, with 6 being the worst rating. The category to earn the most points was "Communications," meaning KUOI, which earned about 235 points.

The other categories were "Publications," meaning the Argonaut and the Gem of the Mountains, which earned about 190 points; "Student Government" and "Recreation," which nearly tied with about 175 points; "Entertainment" with about 140 points; and "Academics" with about 120 points.

The survey also included space for comments. Doze said the most common remarks were: "Nobody listens to KUOI. Terminate it." "Make the lazy — who don't go to class pay for their own lecture notes." (Dose did not repeat the profanity which apparently was contained in the comment.) "Publish the Argonaut once a week.

Dose said he thinks what is spent on ASUI services should reflect how students want their money to be spent.

According to a graph Dose distributed, the average student wants 26 percent of his fees to be spent on academic programs; 17 percent each on student government, entertainment and recreation; 15 percent on the Argonaut and 9 percent on KUOI.

Dose said the response regarding KUOI was "way out of proportion" with what the ASUI spends on the station.

Dose suggested that the senate consider changing the programming at KUOI or "cut it entirely."

Credit load issue at faculty council

College deans, like the graduate dean, should be able to decide whether a student can take an overload of credits during the summer session. This was the general consensus of the Faculty Council as they discussed in great length the amount of credits a student may take during the summer session.

Faculty Secretary Bruce Bray said he will write up the council's ideas in the form that they will need to be put into the University of Idaho bulletin and present it to the council in their meeting next week.

The limitation, as now stated in the UI bulletin, is that an undergraduate student can take no more than the 10 credits per eight-week session or an accumulation greater than 1.25 credits a week for one week with approval by the student's adviser. The student can exceed these limits only by petition to the Council of Academic Deans.

Graduate students need only the approval of the graduate dean to take an overload.

Sid Eder, director of summer sessions, said the policy would impact certain colleges, especially the college of education.

He said that the University of Idaho is the only institution that uses the 1.25 accumulation policy, and this causes impediments to those professionals who use the summer session as week.

JUMPERS RAISE MONEY

Hop, Skip, Jump! An all campus Jumpathon was held on February 23, to raise money for the fight against American number one killer — heart disease and stroke.

The Jumpathon, better known as Jump Rope for Heart, was sponsored by the Physical Education Major and Minor's Club, the Idaho Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, and the American Heart Association.

Bonnie Hubert, organizer of the event, said, "This event was attended by all schools of the area, and was tied in with cardiovascular fitness. It usually culminates at this time of the year, and was a good way for those who have had some jump rope experience to have a good time and further their health." In fact, rope skipping is an excellent cardiovascular fitness program, usually recognized as one of the best ways to get into overall good shape.

Teams of six students jumped rope for a maximum of three hours, but not three hours straight for each member; instead, the way it usually works is "when one member gets tired, usually after a ten minute jump period, then another member of the team can jump for ten minutes, and so on," said Hubert.

Since he is a money raising effort, pledge sheets were distributed to the various living groups. Pledges collected were distributed to the local Heart Association programs in research, education, and community service.

"85 percent of the money raised went to the American Heart Association, 6 percent to the Alliance of Health. Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, five percent to the National Alliance of the same name, and the last five percent will go to our club for expenses," explained Bonnie.

Local businesses donated prizes to be awarded during the Jumpathon for categories such as the oldest and the youngest jumper.

These prizes included coupons for pizzas, hamburgers, some Idaho Athletic bags, a few cases of Pepsi from Lewiston Beverage Company, and gift certificates from various local merchants.

Tough choices

The concern which prompted an informal survey of students by ASUI Senator David Dose contains much food for thought. However, given the limited nature of the survey and its restriction to on-campus residents, no one should misconstrue the results as indicating anything more than the isolated opinions of some 50 students.

The budgetary problems which have suddenly hit the ASUI — due to lower than expected enrollments — have sent the senators scurrying in search of ways to slash this year's budget. Next year's allocations by the ASUI have already been cut by 10 percent.

Informal polls are a bad way to go about determining which expenditures should be eliminated. What the senators and ASUI President Jane Freund need to do is examine the issue very carefully, and cut back funding only to those departments which serve very limited constituencies. While no department currently funded by ASUI should be faced with cutbacks, those which serve a wide audience — and which serve students most visibly through service and training — should have some guarantee of continued operation.

Radio station KLOF-AM, the Palouse's only completely creditable, student-run radio outlet is faced, if Dose's survey carries any weight, with virtual extinction. Although I have held back the ASUI faces are for this semester only. It is almost a certainty that any department savaged by cutbacks now will not recoup the funding next year. The scenario — as it has been played out throughout the university — is that once funding is cut, it is virtually impossible to restore.

The return of Moscow and surrounding communities to the Palouse and the reality — spring and snow, that is — is heralded each year by the twin giants of the cultural year — Mardi Gras and the Jazz Festival. The two events put winter behind the community, leading us to look toward the two "happenings" which close out spring — the Borah Symposium and Renaissance Fair.

More than that, however, these two weekends provide a needed change in outlook. Just as winter becomes too drab and dreary we have two weekends of frenetic, wild enthusiasm. Even when the weather fails to cooperate, these weekends reorient the community.

With spring break coming up next weekend, the month or so of classes between St. Patrick's Day and Graduation ought to proceed smoothly. With all this rest, relaxation and culture, the UI should be that gleaming "city on a hill" its founders envisaged.

Take time out and enjoy the great jazz this weekend. We have made it through the rigors of a long snowstorm; and, oh, so sunny — winter, and deserve the good time.

Springtime — at last!

The Jazz Festival is once again thrilling audiences throughout the region, Mardi Gras was a resounding success, plays and concerts abound — it must be springtime on the Palouse.

Heeeeere's Ed$!

Paul Baier

Has anyone out there gotten their personalized check from Ed McMahon yet? You know the one I'm talking about. It's the one-out-of-a-million promotional sweepstakes that you find in your mailbox that promises if you win, "Heeeeere's Johnny!" on the deck of cards you hand to your hand to your check for a MILLION DOLLARS!

I've been waiting for mine for a long time.

Every day I check the old mailbox, look forEd or wait for the Reader's Digest black lorraine to whisk me to the nearest airport. Fly me to Chicago and then have some hand a check for a MILLION DOLLARS! But the mailbox is always empty, Ed stays in Burbank and the only black lama that pulls up is my landlord's.

But I still send in the little forms, check the "no, I don't want to subscribe box," lick the stamp that will guarantee me a new Ferrari, and my last $22 cents and send it in.

I don't care what they claim, but I know that when you check the "no, I don't want to subscribe box," your entry goes into the "no, and you aren't going to win either box."

But I still send them in.

And you know why? Because I'd love to win a MILLION DOLLARS! Wouldn't you? Admit it. You send in those suckers too, don't you? And why not? Some lucky suckers are going to find a check in their mailbox, get visited by Ed or whisked away to Chicago in a grand old time. Or are they?

Have you ever noticed how you never hear anything about the winner until it's time for a new promotion? You've probably seen the TV ads.

They hype a ballistics from Backwater, Ten- nesse that draws in a Southern monotone. "I was a million dollars and you can too. Now my momma will never make grits again on the old cook stove." Sure, buddy, and you're about as excited as an old hound dog on the porch in August.

If I had won and they tried to get me to make the commercial, about all I'd be able to do is shriek, "I won a MILLION DOLLARS!"

I got so mad for me that I started entering the Washington State Lottery. And like everyone else that enters for the first time, I was sure I was going to win.

I figured the combination of numbers I picked couldn't lose. I was very scientific about it. I remembered memorable numbers in my past and then used the age I was at the time for a lottery number.

Things like my first beer — 12; my first girlfriend — 8; my first F in Econ. — 30. My first year with Steve Symms was in '62. It was very systematic about it, but I didn't win. Three people from Oregon won 2 MILLION DOLLARS! I wasn't jealous, though, I just sent each one a letter asking for half. I'm still checking my mailbox, but the checks haven't arrived yet.

I know I'm never going to win a MILLION DOLLARS! And when I do, when the little ping-pong balls pop up with my numbers, or when Ed comes knocking at my door, or when that black lama comes scrunching up my driveway, I'll be ready.

It won't change me though. And you'll still be able to recognize me when you see me on TV shrieking "I just won a MILLION DOLLARS! And I'm never eating Top Ramen again."

Paul Baier, former managing editor for this newspaper, was, at the conclusion of this column, whisked away by a very large black lama.
Commentary

Tom for Gov.

Douglas Jones

Having worked last year with the Idaho legislature, I was particularly interested in the debate about Idaho Speaker of the House, Tom Stivers, might run for governor.

I can still remember sitting in the House gallery watching this man go from the floor with colorful intros, shouts, and threats. Boy, does he know how to keep them in line!

Tom Stivers knows a lot of other things, too. The man is gifted with an insight into running, not only his own bank, but every department under the Idaho state budget. His knowledge alone should get him the office. His views are well thought-out and stand alone against the river of unintelligent facts and opinions that say otherwise.

If he does run, the people of the state will have an opportunity to examine this man’s inspiring record of public service. Yes, the voting public will get to see his entire record. A lot of people don’t know that Stivers in years ago voted a statement that he has “done more for education than” the Idaho School Superintendent’s Association.

Forget about the voting record. Just look at the ideas the man has:

1. Tom Stivers sees the logic in selling the state of Idaho’s buildings to private business (including the State Capitol) so that the state could lease them back.
2. Tom Stivers sees that the real way to create educational opportunity in Idaho is to sell our higher educational institutions to private enterprise.
3. Tom Stivers alone understands that the best way to create efficiency in our universities is to get them in a “fight to the death” back-bitting contest for each other’s funds.
4. Tom Stivers has given northern Idaho its best reasons for succession.
5. Tom Stivers also has the ability to get presidents of universities to confide in him things that they vehemently deny in public.
6. Tom Stivers and his loyal comrades can look through the usual screen of cries and whiners to see that state employees are grossly overpaid.

7. The Stivers group alone upholds the logic that all kids can get a better education at home than in school.
8. And just when we were getting used to Reaganomics, along comes Stiver’s own brand of economics — the idea that the state budget can be cut though the federal government is turning over more and more programs to the states.
9. And lastly, Stivers and his band believe that the state of Idaho can do fine (like Illinois!) with the lowest paid teachers and professors in the nation.

There is no doubt about it — the man is the greatest political princess to come along since the ignoble George Hansen. After all, if we can’t have George the Dragon Killer we should have Tom the Titan.

It is no mistake that the predominantly Mormon Twin Falls district elected Stivers, even though he has done a drink every now and then (nobody’s perfect). It is also no mistake that the House of Representatives selected him to speak on their behalf — they’re not idiots.

When Stivers runs he’ll have no problem beating that state wide was a whisper-snapper of a Lt. Governor for the Republican nomination. Then the state will get to see televised debates of Stivers showing just how the people want for governor by staring a shouting match with former Governor Cecil Andrus.

And how the people will vote. Voters that had not bothered to vote in the last three elections.

I think he ought to look to bigger things outside of the state. I think he ought to run for President.

Hold on drinking

Editor,

There is a perception, largely in the minds of those who drink, that education budgets and the students of UI live only for "booze, broods, booms and broads". Given this notion, those who wield power in the legislature continually seek to raise higher education budgets and forestall progressive program development, which ultimately tears down a system that seeks to produce successive generations of enlightened Idahoans. They do this in ignorance, in the name of cost reduction or simply because they see only an apathetic, narcisstic student body who care for little, save their social life.

Yet on this first Friday of March, we have the chance to make a strong, rational statement to those who doubt our sincerity as students.

I speak of the "Rally for Higher Ed" to take place this afternoon at 3:30 on the Admin lawn. I challenge you to postpone a happy hour sojourn just this once, so that as a collective whole we can demonstrate to the legislature our support for the quality in Higher Ed. It’s not asking very much from each of us. And it will effectively convey our pride, our concern and our sincerity as UI students.

Please help convince the Legislature of our united stance by showing up for the rally at 3:30. It is an important gesture on our part.

Best idea not 1

Editor,

I enjoyed the letter concerning the styrofoam cups in the SUB. Isn’t it surprising how they make bad coffee taste even worse. Styrofoam, besides being 100 percent nonbiodegradable, irregular plastic will not break down in around 10,000 years, also gives off cancer when burned. That’s one reason it’s no longer used for inner wall insulation. Try a few more facts of petroleum waste on for size. I know of three plants recording plastic the oil companies bought. Have you noticed them in use? Goodyear bought the patent for a tire designed to last an average of 100,000 miles. Have you seen one? I have a friend who quit Texaco Corporation when twice he saw an executive rip up a patent for 10 times the mileage. In layman’s terms, that’s 200 to 500 m.p.g., instead of the 20 to 50 so advertised with pride.

Free enterprise may no longer be free, but it certainly is entering.

Education march

Editor:
As students at the University of Idaho, we are directly affected by decisions made by the Idaho legislature concerning higher education. The current session of the Idaho legislature is considering proposals which, if passed, may adversely affect higher education in Idaho. A student march will be held Friday, March 1, to demonstrate to the legislature that students at UI strongly support higher education and stand opposed to measures which undermine it.

The march will begin at 3:30 pm at the Administration Building and proceed to the UCC. Representatives from area colleges and universities will be speaking on the issue. We strongly encourage students to participate in the march in order to make a meaningful statement to the legislature.

What kind of people take Army ROTC?

They're all kinds of people, from all walks of life, with all kinds of interests. Music, sports, engineering, and almost every academic major.

Their reasons for taking Army ROTC are as diverse as they are themselves.

Some want the personal benefits they'll get from a pure leadership course. Others want the experience they'll get from serving as an Army officer, and the headstart it will give them in a civilian career.

Some can use the extra $100 a month they'll get for up to 20 months during the Advanced Course. Others just like the physical and mental challenge.

What kind of people take Army ROTC? People who want to get everything they can out of their college years. People like you.

Party had losses

Editor:
A few weeks ago Charlotte Buchanan contended several fraternities on the UI campus about hosting a pre-Mardi Gras party hoping to promote ticket sales for this weekend's Beaux Arts Ball. Sigma Chi, Phi Kappa Alpha, and Tau Kappa Epsilon agreed to host the all campus party which was held at the Sigma Chi house on Saturday, the 16th. Although we didn't manage to sell many tickets, we felt the party was a success.

I would like to thank the following organizations for their generous contributions: John's Alley, Billiard Den, Latah Distributors, Corner Poces, Gambino's, Murder, and Soak, Spruce Tavern, Sigma Chi, Pi Kappa Alpha, and Tau Kappa Epsilon.

Unfortunately, a few less considerate party-goers spoiled the fun for the rest of us. Stolen articles include two tags (one universal, one diamond), a new ski parka, a plaque off the wall, a valuable official Sigma Chi document and several paddles from the 20's and 30's donated by alumni. These Sigma Chi treasured are of great sentimental value to our fraternity and have no monetary value to anyone else. We would appreciate the return of any and all of these articles or information about how we might recover them. If the parties who took these articles wish to remain anonymous they can return them to the ASUI office in the SUB. Any information regarding the party or parties who collected for more beer and never returned would also be appreciated.

The executive director of the Political Economy Research Center in Bozeman, Mont., will be the UI's visiting Scholar in Political Economy this spring.

John A. Baden will make several trips to UI, the first on March 7. At that time he will review and analyze three books at the bi-institutional meeting of the Business Discussion Club. He is also slated to be on campus in mid-April during Natural Resources Week. Details of his other visits are still being arranged.

Baden earned his Ph.D. at Indiana University and has prepared numerous publications on topics such as natural resource management, environmental ethics, alternative energy and the timber harvesting policy of the U.S. Forest Service.
Jazz Festival a homecoming for UI grad

By Ed Ulman
Staff Writer

"Like all artists he (Lionel Hampton) can be tempestual and, of course, the life is hard, but that is the nature of the gig," said bass trombonist Chris Gulhaugen, a graduate of the University of Idaho who is presently the composer-arranger and bass trombonist for the Lionel Hampton big band.

Also here with Gulhaugen is Hampton's lead trumpeter, John Pendenna. Hampton's full big band won't be here this year, but the two are here to direct and take part in the big band that will be featured Saturday night in Memorial Gym.

"A lot of jazz great band leaders, Lionel Hampton, will be there along with tenor saxophonist Stan Getz for what should be a blow-out concert on that final Saturday night. These are students and local musicians which include such local notables as: UI director of jazz studies, trumpeter Robert McCurdy; WSU Tenor saxophonist and jazz director, Greg Yasinitsky and UI music faculty member Dan Bulwich on drums. This band is great," said Gulhaugen, after the rehearsal Wednesday night, "and we're doing all the hard ones -- nothing but openers and closers.

Gulhaugen started playing and writing for Hampton three and a half years ago. Before that he had taught at the Tacoma Community College. But after three years at the college, he decided teaching wasn't for him; he packed his bags and left for New York. His first big break came when jazz trombonist Curtis Fuller heard him and his arrangements. Fuller suggested a position with Hampton and Gulhaugen got the gig without having to audition.

"Lionel just told me to show up on Tuesday, I did," Gulhaugen said.

Having spent five years here at the UI studying for his bachelor's degree in music composition, Gulhaugen said coming back feels like old home week.

"Compared to New York, this is heaven," Gulhaugen said.

Gulhaugen is the typical, cool sort of jazz musician who at first seems simple and laid-back in a conversation. But there's much more under the musician's facade than that. He's an individual who has developed a philosophy about his work and his life style.

"Satisfying myself musically is important; there is always something new to develop," Gulhaugen said. "And what can be more satisfying than doing what you want and getting paid for it?"

"But the most important thing is knowing that people only pay for good material. Money is the reinforcement," Gulhaugen continued. "If you can only get paid because you've done a good job, you've done a good job.""Gulhaugen, who was originally classically trained here at the UI and raised with classical music, also knows exactly what kind of music he likes to play, "I like to play music that moves people, that makes some emotions happen. Lionel plays music in an entertaining fashion," Gulhaugen said.

He also had something to say about trying to make it in New York. "There are too many people and not enough jobs. In New York, though there are a lot of opportunities to play with bad bands," Gulhaugen continued.

Utah Symphony travels to Palouse

One of the most traveled orchestras in the nation will bring Mozart's Symphony No. 33 K. 319, Barber's Violin Concerto and Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 to the Palouse in a concert set for Monday, March 4, at the Washington State University Coliseum Theater.

The Utah Symphony gave its first concert in 1940, and since then has grown from a relatively unknown ensemble of 52 musicians to a nationwide symphony with 85 musicians.

The orchestra has made five international tours and travels some 20,000 miles each year to perform. The symphony ranks third in the country in total performances given by a major symphony, presenting more than 350 concerts every season.

During a recent visit to London, a critic said about the Utah Symphony, "By any standard the Utah Symphony is a first class ensemble. Make no mistake, this is a great orchestra."

Conductor and violinist Joseph Silverstein is the Artistic Director, selected from 163 candidates for his post with the Utah Symphony. Previously, Silverstein served as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Silverstein is recognized as one of the foremost violinists today, and received a Grammy nomination for his recent Telarc recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Vivaldi's "The Four Seasons." Silverstein will be the soloist for the Barber Violin Concerto.

Charles Ketcham, associate conductor, will lead the symphony during Silverstein's performance. Ketcham was among the first to be chosen for the Eton Arts Endowment conductor program. He has conducted in Europe and Africa, as well as with American orchestras as the Pittsburgh, Dallas, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Denver, and Portland symphonies.

Concert Master Andres Cardenes holds the distinction of being the top American prize winner in the 1982 Tchaikovsky International Violin Competition in Moscow. He was the recipient of the Bronze Medal at the 1980 Sibelius International Competition in Finland, the highest prize ever awarded an American.

Since 1980, Cardenes has been a cultural ambassador for UNICEF, giving numerous benefit concerts worldwide on their behalf.

Tickets for the concert are $7 to $10 and are available at the WSU Coliseum box office and the information desk in the University of Idaho Student Union Building.

The performance will begin at 8 p.m.

For further information call ASU Productions at (208) 885-6484 of the WSU Coliseum at (509) 335-1514.

musicians." Gulhaugen said. "I've been lucky enough to play music that is commercially accept-able, with good musicians, that's still a lot of fun."

Although Gulhaugen is good at what he does, his income could never support a family nor could his musician's life style. He's content to continue as he does, making such sacrifices for his trade as extensive travel and exhausting work.

"Travel is a hard part of living — it's hard on the body," He said, "I can lose three to four pounds just during a three hour gig."

"Many people might ask, 'Why would anyone want to take such risk and work so hard when there's not much of a reward?'"

"I did because... the reward is playing."

The class will be held in the University of Idaho Women's Physical Education Building Room 212 and are open to the public.

Dance students from throughout the Pacific Northwest, Lewiston-Clarkston Valley are invited to attend. The beginning/intermediate/advanced class will be held from 12:30 to 2:00 p.m., and the intermediate/advanced class will be held from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

The cost for each class is $6. Both classes can be taken for $10.

Off-campus students can meet with ASU senators March 5 at the SHB Galena Room from 3:30 to 5 p.m.

Any other students who would like to talk to the senators are also welcome.

Tanis Michaels, who has worked with jazz great Bob Furse, in films such as "All that Jazz" and shows such as "Dan- cin'" will teach master classes in beginning/intermediate/intermediate/advanced jazz at the University of Idaho on Saturday, March 3, under the sponsorship of the American Festival Ballet.

Off-campus student set

Tanis Michaels started his career performing with Ann Margret after completing his B.F.A. degree in acting and directing from the University of Southern California. He took part in the first national tour of "Chicago," with Gwen Verdon and Chita Rivera, and in the first national and oriental tour of "Dancin'," with Ann Bierking and Channah Bergman.

His film credits include "Fam- ily Lady," "Soylent Green" and "All That Jazz." Tanis has headed jazz departments, and taught master classes in New York City, Cannes, San Jose, Los Angeles, Chicago and San Diego.

Next season Michaels will be setting one of his works, "Fresh Air Fear", for the Alvin Alley Dance Company of New York City.

admissions system are "generally a bit more aggressive and self-motivated" and thus tend to compete and inspire each other — meaning that they are more likely to pursue a Rhodes scholarship. "The negative is not having the environment that stimulates creativity," he said. Moscow also does not offer the opportunities for social service, an important judging criterion, that an urban center can, said Hackmann.

Despite the drawbacks, Hackmann asserts that "there are qualified students on campus — it's just a matter of identifying them." Hackmann solicits applicants primarily in three ways: through public notices, directly contacting students with high GPAs after viewing a pinout of the entire student body's grades, and through faculty recommendations. The last, Hackmann says, is the most valuable and the most respected potential source.

"The faculty have not been going out of their way to encourage the right people to apply," he said. Henberg agreed that ignorance is probably keeping some exceptional African-American students from applying.

"A lot of the good engineers have never found out about the program," he said regretfully.

Both Henberg and Hackmann hope that the University's Rhodes Honors program, initiated in 1982, will inspire more students to pursue the scholarships and also help eliminate a common weakness in applicants — the lack of diversity in academic backgrounds.

"If you're a chemical engineer, you're usually not interested in taking Shakespeare," said Hackmann. He explained that the recent trend toward very specialized fields of studies has reinforced the norm that the majority of the Rhodes scholars are liberal arts majors. As all of the applicants are outstanding in their respective fields, the committee must look for those students who also have a diverse academic background to differentiate between the candidates.

"We had a biology major who was just outstanding, but she was a little weak outside of her DNA interests," illustrated Hackmann.

Henberg speculated that the UI produced so many Rhodes scholars because of the efforts of a class of students who were "dissuading" that time, Greek and Latin were entrance requirements at the University.

Anyone interested in breaking the UI's dry spell should speak to Professor Hackmann in Room 311C of the Administration Building.

"I am certain that we have some people who are quite capable of winning," Hackmann stressed, "and they don't have to be supermen or superwomen."

an intensive workshop for "brushing up" their skills.

He said the college of education the workshops designed especially for returning teachers for 4- and 6-week sessions and that sometimes these classes overlap for a couple weeks, giving the student an "overload" of credits.

They must then petition, which involves a $5 fee and a waiting time. This is a cumbersome process, he said, and may cause some of these teachers to go elsewhere.

However, Charles R. Stratton, a representative of the University Curriculum Committee, said these teachers constitute only a small minority now and that the current rule should be kept.

He said that 80 percent of these enrolled in last year's summer school had been registered here the previous semester.

At J. Lingg, vice chairman of the Faculty Council, said, "These people know what they are up against in summer school. If they can handle it, why not let them?"

Roger Wallins, assistant dean of the graduate school, said that the graduate dean's office tries to dissuade students from taking an overload.

He said that 10 credits during the summer session is equivalent to 30 credits in the regular semester.

He said the goal for the student is not to take as many credits as possible, but to "savor" them, that he does, and by having the time to go to seminars and do background work.

Play successfully looks at cultures

By Douglas Jones
Staff Writer

Somehow, in the festivities of Mardi Gras and Greek Little Sister rush last weekend, many people missed the opening of Brian Friet's Translations.

Although this weekend may also be busy with the Jazz Festival, you owe it to yourself (and a friend) to see this striking production.

Last Friday evening, before a smaller audience than it deserved, this play opened its eyes and ears to the life of an Irish community in 1833. I loved it.

Brian Friet's writing is colorful, lively and rich in meaning and depth. Translations' first and second acts are permeated with the action, romance, and characterization of the great drama. The third act, although striking in characterization and action, lacked a structural climax and hence floundered a bit.

The characters in the play were portrayed as benevolent people caught in the friction between two great forces: Ireland with the gravity of its culture, history, and mythology, resisting the momentum of England to move the Gaelic culture into the nineteenth century.

The title Translations takes on many levels of meaning in the plays. The romantic lovers seek to translate their feelings to each other without the benefit of common language. The Irish people either seek or refuse to seek ways to translate their culture into the mainstream of human history in the 1800's.

The set, designed by Brockman, illustrates the relatively carefree life of the Celtic characters and its contrast with the British lifestyle. The set is a barn that is 'abondoned as a school in thing that is in violation of English law.'

The script likely offered a variety of interpretations and it is to director Forrest Sears' credit that he chose to place every character's best and most human characteristic in the forefront. The audience is drawn to all the characters, even Captain Lancey (played by Charles Miller) and Dolly Dan-dally (played by Louis Sumrall), who both are indicative of the violent aspects of each culture.

Shelley Olson's performance as Maire, and Russell Leatherman as Lt. Yolland conveyed the magic and passion of romance in a situation of tender frustration.

Russell Leatherman's exceptional showing as the British officer becomes more remarkable when one considers that this is his first appearance on the Ul stage.

Also, as would be expected from a theater staff member. Dan Cochran's performance as Owen was nothing short of professional. (Cochran is also the technical director.)

All the roles are professionally filled. From Lori White's mimed role of Sarah to Randy Blake's role of Manus. Several performances came alive. Shelley Olson's as Maire, Louis Sumrall's as Duality, Dan Cochran's and Russell Leatherman.

The play is new, universal and one that I am sure will be hearing from again.

Translations continues at the Hartung Theater March 12 and 13. Performances start at 8 p.m.

UI salutes Bach

UI music students will pay tribute to the 200th anniversary of Johann Sebastian Bach's birth in a musical concert at 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 7 in the Music School Recital Hall. The program will include a varied menu of Bach's compositions for different instrumental and vocal media.

There will be chorale preludes played by David Ingram, an alto aria from Cantata 94, sung by Lisa Williams with Kristina Syversson, flute and Susan Billin, organ; Trio Sonata in C Major performed by Rhonda Larson, flute, Jefferson Scheepfijn, violin, Susan Billin, harpsichord; and the "Brandenburg" Concerto No. 4 for violin (Scheepfijn), two flutes (Syversson, Larson), strings and continuo.

Students are invited to come to this spring salute to the works of one of history's finest composers.

Film is entertaining, sure thing

By Lewis Day

A "sure thing," or so the film of the same name assures us, is free, unattached, relaxed, non-committal sex. And, as the movie goes on to point out, there really is no such thing. The Sure Thing is the rather simple story of the age-old Hollywood romantic — boy meets girl, girl meets boy. Without much pretense, The Sure Thing talks frankly, although with some humor, at the complete silliness which can result when two people from different existences are thrown together. Director Rob Reiner (This Is Spinal Tap) has put together a production which is boisterous while maintaining a sense of reality; the film is silly enough to appeal to college audiences but has, at the same time, an intuitive grasp of what post-puberty — the college years — is all about.

Daphne Zuniga stars as Alison, a freshman at "a small northeastern college." The usual euphemism for upper middle class allusion. Alison is portrayed as being a bit shy, with a tough defensive exterior which can come from doing much that is impulsive or out of form. Her life mapped out for the next 20 years, Alison is purposed to a future which contains all the law career and basinet hounds. Alison, in other words, is a bit of a dork.

Alison's foil in The Sure Thing is Gib, played by John Cusack. Gib is everything Alison is not — jaucular, impulsive, sly and more than a little overbearing. Gib's defensive motto seems to be, "keep 'em laughing and they won't see how insecure you are." Gib is in short, somewhat of a jerk.

It does not take a genius to see how much Alison and Gib have in common. Not much. Of course — otherwise there wouldn't be no movie — Gib and Alison are thrown together. They are in the same English class, they wind up crossing the country together and they develop a deep antipathy for one another. Must be true love, right? Alison has to travel to Los Angeles to spend the Christmas holidays with her boyfriend, a colorless slug named Joel — or Jeff... or Jerry... or something, Gib, on the other hand, sets out to meet a "sure thing" a friend has set up for him. He is promis- ed little more than a lump of willing flesh — sex without any conditions. The "object" — and that is how she's portrayed throughout the film — is a likesome tanned blonde who exudes the typical eroticism of Hollywood dreams. Gib is out to get a "sure thing.

The balance of The Sure Thing follows Alison and Gib across the country as they en- counter situations and people who are even stranger than they are. Piercingly funny moments are sandwiched between very clear scenes in which the two really begin to know — and appreciate each other.

Reiner's use of comic situations to drive home the idea that blossoming romance downplay the "seriousness" of the situations. Love, while the earnest stuff the future is made of, is treated without the overwhe- ming deference which often makes supposed love stories rock with phoniness. Keeping things in balance, however, The Sure Thing treats the emotions of these youngsters with respect. The result is a film which laughs at itself while maintaining a grip on the very real emotions and trials these kids must go through. The Sure Thing makes a masterful mix between truth and fiction. the result being — as we all suspect — that the two are not so different after all.

While not particularly outstanding in terms of acting — as such — or writing, or editing, The Sure Thing is an enjoyable film. You do feel that's precisely what Reiner was striving for. It is in a season divided between insincere skin flicks and very effective drama, a little fun is exactly what is in order. It is, in effect, a "sure thing."

The Sure Thing, was presented as a sneak preview last night by Rodgers. It is currently showing at Pullman's Cordova Theater.

Women after 25, 26

By Mike Long
Northwest Staff Writer

The very successful Idaho women's basketball team will finish regular conference play tonight and tomorrow as they go up against the Weber State Wildcats and the Bengals of Idaho State.

This will be the second time that Idaho has faced the two teams. The Vandals have proven themselves to be accomplished kitten takers after defeating both Weber and Idaho State, 87-67 and 102-61 respectively, this season.

Head Coach Pat Dohrutz does not expect a strong challenge from either team since Weber appears to have locked up the fourth position in the Mountain West Conference standings with a 5-7 record.

The starting lineup will be a little different as the Vandals hit the road. All-American candidate Mary Raney is suffering from a sore foot caused by a stress fracture and will not be starting as center for her team.

Instead, the other half of the "Twin Marys," Mary Westerwelle, will step into her place and starting guard Pasha Getty will take Westerwelle's starting forward position.

Getty will be replaced in the guard position by Netra McGrew, who was a regular starter in last year's lineup. Dohrutz says the team will have to "play extremely hard to make up the point difference."

She feels her team may have relaxed before the loss of Rase to the bench, but now Dohrutz foresees them working extra hard. The opposition will probably be "excited if they don't see Rase in the lineup."

This does not mean that Idaho will be any weaker even though Rase is on the bench. She is matched in game-high points by Westerwelle at 28 and more than half of the starting squad has shot over 20 in any one game.

If the Vandals do get into a position requiring Rase, she is still available from the sidelines.

Dohrutz described the lineup change as presenting "really no problem."

She said the key to the Weber game will be to "get the game running," and this she will be able to do by the insertion of McGrew who, along with starting guard Robin Behrens, is known for quickness on the playing court.

Following their match-up with the Wildcats at Ogden, Utah, the Vandals will take a short trip north to Pocatello where they'll face off against the Bengals, a team that has never defeated the Idaho women.

The only way the Bengals can hope to have a chance at making the MWC playoffs will be to defeat both Eastern Washington and Idaho. "We'll know if they have a chance," Dohrutz said.

The Bengals are the biggest tests Idaho faces in the MWC, even "taller than us," Dohrutz said.

Offensively, the Vandals will continue to hold their grip on the fourth position in the conference.

Depending on the outcome of the first two games, the Vandals will then take on either the Eagles of Eastern Washington or the University of Montana Grizzlies, last year's conference champs.

According to Dohrutz, the Vandals need the two wins this weekend to buy insurance against disaster in the playoffs. Should the Vandals secure these two wins, but fail to secure the top of the MWC, they will have a chance at an at-large berth to the NCAA playoffs.

Dohrutz said the location of the first round playoffs in the NCAA and the teams competing will be announced Sunday morning, March 10 at 11 a.m.

The Vandals have slipped out of the tie for the 20th position or the AP poll even though they defeated their last two opponents. As of last week, Idaho was also ranked 17th in the USA Today/CNN poll and 19th in the UPI poll.

Vandals prepare for final two

The University of Idaho basketball team faces their final two Big Sky League contests as they travel to Pocatello tonight to take on Idaho State and tangle with the Weber State Wildcats Saturday in Ogden.

Idaho could sneak out of the BSC cellar if they could knock off ISU and upset Weber State. The Bengals are currently two games up on the Vandals in conference standings. The Bengals must also drop Saturday's contest against Boise State.

Idaho State, the UI's only league win this year, like the Vandals are coming off three straight Big Sky losses. The Bengals are currently 3-9 in league and 11-17 overall.

The Bengals are led by senior guard Nelson Peterson, the BSC second leading scorer. Peterson's 18.3 average is joined in double figures by teammates Ron Holstein's 7.4 and Chris Blocker's 10 pt average.

Saturday brings the Vandals into Ogden to take on Weber State, still in contention for the Big Sky crown.

Weber is led by senior Shawn Campbell's 15.8 scoring clip, currently tied for fourth in conference.

Campbell is backed up by fellow seniors Randy Worster's 13.7 average and Kent Hagan's 12.9 average.

One of the top free throw shooters in the nation, Hagan is currently first in the Sky with a 90.5 percent. He is also second in the conference with a 486 percentage.

1-84-9 Big Sky record only trails Reno's 10-3 and Mon.

The Idaho Ruggers, starting their third season of play in the Pacific Northwest College Rugby Union, face perhaps the strongest team in Idaho when playing the Snakes. As a senior men's side, the Snake River organization has been consistently strong in the Pacific Northwest club standings. Most of the Snake River players have been together for five or six years, so they play well as a team. But Idaho Captain Deedee Petersen looks toward this weekend with optimism.

"This weekend is basically a warm up for us," said Petersen.

"Even though we have never beaten the Snakes, we've had some close games. We are bringing down a strong side, so we have a good chance," Petersen said. It will be the Snakes first competition of the season as well. Idaho is traveling to Caldwell with 23 players.

The team's first match in the college union will be March 9th against Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia. Idaho is competing for a spot in the Pacific Coast Collegiate Championships to be held April 27 and 28 in Seattle. This tournament will feature eight teams from the coast region (California, Utah, Arizona, Oregon, Washington and Idaho), and the winner will advance to the NCAA Collegiate Finals. In order for Idaho to move into the coast tournament, they must finish in the top two in the Pacific Northwest.

Based on past seasons, Idaho has a good chance. Currently ranked third behind Oregon State and Washington State, Idaho has many veterans returning from injuries.

Aside from Simon Fraser, Idaho will also play Oregon State, Oregon, W.S.U., Gonzaga and Eastern Washington in collegiate matches, and will host the WSU/UI All College Tournament in Pullman April 12 and 14. The club's first home match is March 23 against the Missouri Muggles.

Center Brett Oliver leads the Bengals on the boards with a 6.7 average andpoint guard Mike Groff leads the team in assists with a 3.5 average.

The Vandals took the first battle between the in-state rivals 95-69 earlier this year in Moscow.

She pointed out that as the rules are currently written, the editor's actions are checked by Section 12.12 of the board's rules and regulations. Section 12.12 allows the editor to make business and editorial policy for the paper "subject to review by the board." Rickey said she likes that wording.

Sen. Rich Kootk said he was opposed to the bill. "I think we need to define what powers we're going to grant the publication of the Argonaut," he said.

Sen. Reilly Kast said the senate should not "pass the buck of responsibility." She said senators have more contact with the students than do the members of the board.

"We know what the students want," she said.

Outdoor Program to challenge McKinley

By Lance Levy
Shall Water

During its 12 years of service to the school and community, the University of Idaho Outdoor Program has taken on many major events. This spring the Outdoor Program will undertake its biggest challenge ever when members of an expedition try to reach the summit of the highest peak on the North American continent: 20,320-foot Mount McKinley.

Ten University of Idaho students, faculty and staff will take part in the expedition. And although many people reach the summit of McKinley each year, the expedition is unique in that the group is going independently and self-guided, said Mike Beiser, Outdoor Program director and expedition leader. Beiser described the expedition as an effort by "everyman" because many members have no previous climbing experience and the opportunity was available to anyone who wanted to make the commitment.

Making the commitment along with Beiser are Mike Burt, Dan Davidson, Ann Ford, Lawton Fox, Paul Framed, Tom Lopez, Dave Kimes, Kendall O'Loughlin and Craig Thomas. Ages of the participants range from 22 to 41.

Beiser, who has climbed worldwide and has reached the summit of Denali (the Indian name for the peak) once before, said that such a climb will require physical strength and endurance. But most important is the personal commitment, motivation, determination and teamwork necessary to enable them to reach the summit.

Aside from these aspects, the mountain itself will also create problems. Located in the Alaska Range in Denali National Park, McKinley rises from nearly sea level to its 20,320 feet, which gives it a higher gain in elevation than Mount Everest. In addition, the peak is located at 35 degrees of latitude farther north than Everest, and less than 200 miles south of the Arctic Circle. Temperatures of 40 degrees below zero combine with 80 to 100 mile winds to make this one of the harshest climates on earth.

The group started organizing for the climb a year ago, and according to Beiser, this is one of the most difficult tasks. Included in organization are the chores of selecting and buying equipment and food, arranging transportation and finding the people to make the trip. Beiser said there are three groups working on logistics, transportation and food preparation.

The team will leave May 13 and will fly to Talkeetna, Alaska. From there they will fly by ski-plane to the Kahiltna Glacier at the 7000-foot level and there they will set up their first of seven camps. The Idaho mountainners will follow what is known as the "standard route" up the mountain, the West Buttress. Another unique feature of the climb is that they will use an Alpine style of climbing, in which each camp will be picked up and moved as they progress, as opposed to an Expedition style, where camps are placed permanently during a trip. By using the alpine style, the group will not have to spend as much money on equipment, and will not have to pack as much equipment.

"We won't be able to fall back on the security of our last camp," said Beiser. As far as the weather is concerned, the group has chosen one of the better times to attempt the summit. Although it can always be harsh and unpredictable, Beiser said their chances are good that it will be stable weather during this time, and that McKinley gets most of its snowfall during the months of August and September.

The team members are training on their own to prepare physically for the climb. One of them, Kendall O'Loughlin, said he has been running and cycling 25 miles a week, and has even spent some nights in his tent testing gear and clothing. The team is indeed taking this seriously.

Equipment for the expedition falls into two categories, that for the group as a whole, such as climbing ropes, tents, cooking stoves, etc., and personal items like sleeping bags, clothing, boots and climbing tools. Since the expedition is self funded, many members are making quite a financial commitment. The total cost of equipment will amount to around $13,000, and all group equipment purchased will be donated to the Outdoor Program after the trip for future educational use.

The other area of organization is planning meals for ten hungry climbers for 20 days on the mountain. Beiser said each climber will try to consume 4000 calories a day. In addition to their personal food preparation, they will look for foods that are light in weight, high in carbohydrates and high in calories. "We'll be eating a lot of pasta," Beiser said.

Another major part of organizing is fund raising. The group is currently applying for sponsorship from companies that could supply equipment, and they are selling T-shirts with the expedition logo. Shirts are on sale for $8.00 and can be purchased at the Outdoor Program.

Beiser is also trying to get a communication network set up to provide radio coverage to local stations during the expedition.

Three weeks before leaving for Alaska, the team will participate in what Beiser called a "shakedown" climb. They will travel to either Mount Hood or Mount Rainier to test their skills and equipment, and this would provide some members with the only real climbing experience they will get before setting foot from the Kahiltna Glacier.

When considering all the barriers that stand between these ten individuals and the summit of Mount McKinley, Beiser stressed that the most important one is to be able to work together as a team.

"Commitment and motivation from each climber is essential, but group dynamics is the key," he said.

With all the hard work and preparation that is going into communication network set up will pay off and the 1985 UI McKinley Expedition will attain its goal.

Branch set

The Mountain West Athletic Conference and the University of Idaho will sponsor a brunch March 8 for the MWAC Championships March 6 and 9. Attending will be the top four finishers in league, the University of Idaho, Eastern Washington, the University of Montana and the undetermined fourth place finisher.

Dr. Richard Gibb will welcome the four schools and all coaches and players will be introduced.

The brunch is set for 9:15 at the University Room at the University Inn Best Western. Tickets are on sale at the Kibbie Dome ticket office for $8.50. Everyone is welcome.

Swimmers qualify

The University of Idaho swim teams wrapped up the season Saturday at the Pacific West Swimming and Diving Championships in Seattle.

In the 11-team field, the UI women placed seventh overall. However, several swimmers qualified for Division II Nationals to be held next month.

Tonya Noziger qualified in the 50 freestyle with a time of 24.76, while Charlene Mitchell turned in a qualifying time of 44.72 in the 100 freestyle. The women also qualified in the 200 freestyle relay (1:41.52) with Tracy Thomas, Tracy Zimmer, Noraziger and Mitchell and the 400 freestyle relay (3:41.29) with Ken Warren, Zimmer, Noziger and Mitchell.

The Idaho men finished fifth out of a eight team field and were led by freshman David Zimmerman and Gavin Hollis. Zimmerman took a first in the 500 freestyle with a time of 4:09.68 while Hollis took the 200 butterfly with a time of 1:49.72.

In addition, the team of Ross Johnson, Chad Bray, Hollis and Zimmerman broke the school record in the 400 freestyle relay with a time of 3:13.72, eclipsing the old record of 3:15.1 set back in 1975.

Loveall golden

Cal Loveall, former University of Idaho men's tennis player, has signed with the Denver Gold of the United States Football League.

Loveall, a 174 pound senior from Kennewick, Wash., was the 51st player selected in the January USFL draft.

Loveall will be in uniform this weekend when the Gold travels to Oakland to take on the Oakland Invaders, according to his agent, Boise attorney Don Copple.

"I was informed that Cal has made the team and is listed as No. 2 at the cornerbacks position," Copple said. "They said he was a very coachable kid and were really impressed by his speed."

Terms of Loveall's contract were not available.

Loveall finished with 51 solo tackles for the 6-5 Vandals, the most by any player. In addition, he deflected a team high eight passes, recovered two fumbles and returned two interceptions for 83 yards.

Loveall was the only Vandals selected in the USFL draft.

Curtis honored

The Idaho Hall of Fame has announced it will induct four persons into the organization at the Idaho Sports Banquet next month, including Idaho broad- caster Bob Curtis.

Curtis, a 1947 graduate of Washington State College, began his career a year earlier as the youngest sportscaster to be hired by Associated Oil for regional college broadcasts. The Palouse native took the helm of the Vandals radio broadcasts in 1956. He started with KIBO in Boise and later joined Lewiston's KOZE before KBRP of Moscow became the Vandals' flagship station.

Curtis, who is a wheat farmer at Garfield, is in his 29th year as "Voice of the Vandals." Twenty of those years, including this year, have earned him the honor of Idaho Sportscaster of the Year.

Along with Curtis, Ted Driehm, Idaho State boxing great Jerry Dellingen, veteran high school and college coach and Bill English, a former official, will be inducted March 23 at the North Shore Convention Center in Couer D' Alene.

Intramural Corner

Badminton singles — Entries are due in the IM office by Tuesday, March 5.

Softball Team Sign-ups — Begin right after spring break but don't miss the deadline.

Congratulations to — Kappa Kappa Gamma for winning the women's track meet.

John Money, sports editor and columnist for the Salt Lake Tribune, will be the featured speaker at the banquet.

Tickets for the banquet are on sale at all Les Schwab Tire stores. All tables are reserved. The cost is $10 for adults and $6 for students college age and under.

Matches set

The University of Idaho men's tennis team will play host to two opponents this weekend in the ASU Kibbie-Dome.

Friday's match brings the University of British Columbia into the Dome. The match is set to begin at 12:00. Saturday's match will see the UI men take on the Pirates of William College.

The 2-0 Idaho women were in Lewiston Thursday taking on the Lewis Clark women's team. Results were not available at press time.
The Boeing Corporation of Seattle recently announced it will be making a $100,000 contribution to the University of Idaho. The gift will be used to initiate an endowment for faculty development in the College of Engineering.

According to Dr. Jack Loughton, Vice President for University Relations and Development, Boeing made this contribution to the University because we have a quality engineering program and many of our graduates are hired by the corporation.

Sian Little, Boeing’s Vice President, wrote to Elderhostel National and Public Relations, concurred, saying that “right now we have 300 UI graduates working for Boeing. We consider the University of Idaho a valuable source of employees, primarily from the College of Engineering, but also the College of Business and Economics.”

Another reason behind Boeing’s contribution is to keep quality engineers teaching at universities. According to Loughton, “Engineers are leaving campuses all across the country for higher paying industrial jobs.” This will hurt the future of engineering because top level engineers will no longer be involved in teaching future engineering students.

Little reiterated Loughton’s concerns. “We’re very concerned about people who pursue advanced degrees. We are in the industry and are partially responsible for the problem. We offer such high salaries to people with brand new engineering degrees that it will be a real financial sacrifice for them to go on to graduate school or to remain at the university to teach,” he said.

Loughton expects the amount of money for the endowment to increase over the next few years, possibly to $500,000. “We plan to add to this initial gift with contributions from other sources and hope that Boeing Corporation will consider us for further assistance.”

Boeing’s announcement was made after representatives from the University, including President Richard Gibb, approached the Seattle-based corporation about initiating the faculty development program. "These kinds of gifts allow the university to maintain a margin of excellence in its programs. They make the difference between just basic, essential programs and quality," said Loughton.
Local wine producer toasts diverse cellar

By Chen Davis
Staff Writer

A thick door on the north end of the house opens with a tug on a leather handle. Welded steel hinges cover the entire width of the door and an etching in the window decorates the simple round pane in an almost alpine fashion. Inside there are two stoves, one is a woodstove and the other is an electric range built into the corner. There is a pressure cooker on the range and a bottle of apple wine is sitting on the counter beside it. The airlock on the bottle pops up and drops occasionally as Charlie Brown describes his original winemaking techniques.

Several jars filled with exotic Idaho wines are displayed on a hexagonal table in the middle of the room. Potato, kiwi fruit, orange, honey and molasses are among the choices. "You can see in my pantry how much food I have canned up," said Brown. "I've got years' worth canned up, and well, I figured I might as well do something else with it, like make a fine wine out of it."

Brown pointed to the gallon bottle of potato vodka. It contained about half an inch of sediment on the bottom. He makes it with Betty Crocker potato buds — instant mashed potatoes, "and it is the finest I have ever found," he said.

"Potato vodka makes one of the finest screwdrivers I have ever tasted. What is vodka but rotten potato?" he asked.

"And believe it or not, I ran into someone else who mentioned this same thing. I hate instant mashed potatoes I think they're gross. The only thing grosser would change the consistency of the liquid so everything would settle sooner."

Brown explained that his is a strictly a low-budget operation and he sticks to the cheapest and most efficient methods of wine making. He simply mixed everything together in the bottle, whether it be kiwi juice, honey, molasses, elderberries or frozen orange juice.

"You can figure two and a half pounds of sugar will give a dry wine, three pounds will give a medium, and three and a half will give a sweet," he said. Brown added that he never uses more than three and a half pounds.

Brown used to have a hydrometer to test the sugar content of a liquid or juice. This insured him of adding just the right amount of sugar. "Mead broke so I just kind of experiment," he said. "I like my wines medium."

The next step is pressure cooking at about 5 pounds. "I pressure cook everything for a half hour; there's no question about it," he said. "Do it to sterilize it. Then I take it out and let it cool. The ideal temperature is 115 degrees. So I don't wait until it's 115 degrees cool, I wait until it's warm."

To avoid contamination, Brown puts a cork on the bottle while it cools. The cooling time is usually about three hours, he said. After the liquid has cooled to the proper temperature, the "onions" are added, he said.

The air lock pops up and drops every now and again to monitor the operation and provide an air seal, he said.

Brown said the whole secret is that the yeast convert to sugar, ethyl alcohol and CO2. "You let it sit and it bubbles out. The ethyl alcohol and the CO2 are the waste products from the yeast.

"You can always tell a fine wine because when you touch it to your tongue it explodes in your mouth," he said.

"Want to try some red wine (with molasses) — I call anything below proof wine and it's just a general term," he said. "I think the rum is quite good. I call it a more of a liqueur. I think it's quite excellent and you see if you distill out wine then it's become brandy and brandy is just concentrated wine."

"Another secret is to put raisins in because raisins are a special spice to the wine," he said.

Then he reaches for a smaller jar containing an off-yellow liquid. "Have a sip of Kiwi, it's strange," he said.

It had quite a bite to it and not a lot of flavor, "It's a thing to understand yeast," Brown said. "Different yeasts give different wines different flavor. They each give a different taste and that's the key — waste products. Through my trials I've found the special spice of special wines.

"Different wines have different species of yeast and for me the first I've figured out is Lactobacillus, German yeast..."

He said the best way to find the best yeast is trial and error. "I guess I just know how to work with yeast and I know when it's with sourdough or wine," he said.

"Back in the old days, the only source of molasses in the world was from Puerto Rico. In the days of the old sailing ships, Brown explained. "And they'd bring the molasses back to England on a sailing ship and they found out they got more money when it was aged, when it was good, and that's how rum originated. That's all rum is fermented molasses."

"Mead, on the other hand, is made out of honey. Mead is to savors — it's the liquid of the older wines there. It's honey beer in Germany. I do carafe it because that's a lot more process, you know, turning it into a beer or wine. When I figure the bees put a preservative agent in the honey because it takes a long time to ferment," he said.

"You can't buy mead in this country anymore. You used to be able to buy it back East in the delta's, and even the delta quilts carrying it."
Students get access to copy machines

New copy machines will soon be available for student use at the U of I. The new locations will provide easy and quick service.

Campus Quick Copy will open a new service in the basement of the SUB on March 30. The Campus Quick Copy Service will offer a special during the first month of operation: Buy one, get one free.

There are many advantages to having a copy service at the SUB. First, it provides easy access for students. Second, it is a quick and inexpensive service. Third, it is an operated service. A student can drop off paperless, go to class, and return to pick up the finished product.

Like the present copy services at the Continuing Education Building, at the food Science Building, the service is designed for all students and teachers. The Quick Copy service is designed for all students and teachers. The Quick Copy service will not require a minimum number of copies like the copy service at the Continuing Education Building, requiring a minimum of five copies.

Also on campus there will be two new coin-operated machines with automatic coin-changers to provide convenience for students. A new Xerox copier will be put in the hallway of the Administration Building, replacing the large IBM that is there now. A coin-operated Canon machine will be available in the basement of the Science SUB. Both of these machines will cost five cents per copy.

Wine, from page 16.

"The funny thing about wine is that you let it bubble for three or four weeks and you think it's done. And then taste it and it's hardly even fermentened. But let it sit for a month and it becomes a language of its own, and it ferments really, really slow," said Brown. A bright orange wine, Judy's, is set to be featured at the 1985 Undergraduate Juried Exhibition.

The gallery will host a reception for the artists on opening day, Tuesday, March 25 at 6 p.m.

Students can also access the exhibit for free and take part in guided tours.

Tender Moments with a Motorcycle Mama

Cherilyn Sarkasian was a very shy girl, with large brown eyes. By age twelve, she had perfected the form of an autograph — Cher — that she, when she grew up and became an actress, would graciously give to fans. By sixteen she left home, still dreaming of being an actress. At nineteen she was half of a singing team, Sonny and Cher, which sold four million copies of its first record. In due time she owned a 31 room Beverly Hills mansion with a thousand gowns in its closets. She still wanted to be an actress. Instead, she had more million-selling records, a silly hit of a television series and a few seasons prancing Las Vegas stages in gauze and beads.

"You see," Cher says, "the reason it took me so long to become an actress was that people could only see my comedic side."

Cher is definitely an actress now, with an Oscar nomination to verify what fans and critics have felt about her complex, yet natural performances in Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean and in Silkwood. "I feel freer now than I've ever been," Cher told a reporter after her role in Silkwood, in which she appeared without makeup and with disheveled hair and baggy, mannish clothing. After the 18-gowns-per-show glamor, the gilded G-string, breastplates and headaddress tawdriness, it was like an atonement.

Her third serious role is the new Peter Bogdanovich movie, Mask, which is scheduled to open in late March. Cher steps ahead with a more active sort of a character than Silkwood's Dolly Pelliker, as the motorcycle madonna Rusty Dennis.

At the same time, she retrenches to a sensitive-but-tough persona that dates all the way back to the pop records she made as a teenager. Rusty is a woman who has chosen to be an outsider, to be tough, because she's a very vulnerable girl within. It's a role that fits Cher like a glove.

"When Anna (Anna Hamilton Phelan, Mask's screenwriter) started writing the script," Cher relates, "she said she had this really strange impulse and she went down to the Beverly Cineplex (a Los Angeles theatre) to see Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean and then she came home, got an eight by ten glossy of me, put it up on the wall and started writing it with me in mind."

The real Rusty Dennis mothered a son who suffered from a disfiguring disease but had, with his mother's encouragement, an amazingly positive sense of himself and what he could accomplish. One of the things Cher did to prepare for the role was to meet the woman who had already lived the part.

"When I met Rusty," Cher says, "It really didn't ask her about who she was because I think that the best way to find out about someone is to ask them how they feel about everything else. She's just like one big dichotomy — and a real strange combination. Like, she's taken a lot of drugs and she hangs out with bikers, but yet she's very metaphysical."

Cher peppers her conversation with such phrases as "like," "cool" and "hip." Talking to her is like talking to an old friend. At 38, now fulfilling the long-held wish to be an actress, she seems to have put a lot of insecurity behind her. With her singing partner Sonny Bono, Cher was pliant, taking near total direction from her show-biz experienced man. With her doe eyes, straight, long hair and Sunset Strip bellbottom fashious, she was the perfect commercial realization of a Sixties hippie girl. Later, on her own again, she tried for film roles and couldn't get taken seriously. Then came the Vegas act, a short-lived shot at disco queen stardom, a black-leather-imagined rock band. "People regarded me as a clothes hanger more than an entertainer," she opined to a reporter. Yet the image kept her alive and she kept the image alive. She was famous for being popular—or perhaps vice-versa—but she wasn't considered a talent.

Seeing rock singer Linda Ronstadt break loose of her own blue-jeaned image by essaying a lead role in the Joseph Papp production of Gilbert and Sullivan's The Pirates of Penzance, Cher found the courage to try Cherilyn Sarkasian's dream once more. She took a New York apartment and approached Papp for an audition. He asked, bluntly, how in the world he was to know whether she had any talent, considering the "junk" she had been in previously. But she won an audition and a pivotal role in Papp's production of Jimmy Dean. When Altman made the film he kept her in the role, and when director Mike Nichols saw her performance he asked her on the spot to be in Silkwood.

Ironically, Nichols had turned Cher down for a part almost ten years earlier. This time he was so eager to place her in his film that he deliberately withheld the fact that Cher was to play a lesbian with a decidedly un-put-together look. Cher was afraid of going cold turkey on cosmetics, but even more fearful of acting alongside Meryl Streep. The payoff came in great reviews and ever more respectful attention from filmmakers.

"I got the script of Mask last December along with this really wonderful letter from [producer] Marty Starger saying that they [Starger and director Peter Bogdanovich] wanted me for the movie and that they hoped I liked the script as much as they did.

"So I went upstairs and started to read it and when I got about halfway through I was so upset that I went right to the ending, and I was, like, a mess. Then I went back to the middle, finished it, and I mean, I was hysterical. I cried and I cried and I cried. From the moment I read it, it just seemed very real."

Audiences may very likely share some of those copious emotions. Mask is an affecting tale about personal struggle, all the more impactful for being based on fact. Plenty of the film's impact also rides on how true to the tough-sensitive character Cher is. Within limits, Bogdanovich gave her rein to improvise elements of Rusty Dennis.

Once a song-and-dance girl, Cher has evolved a complex screen presence.

"I don't really like being directed that much," Cher confesses. "I like having a certain amount of freedom with which to work. Peter tells you exactly what to do and you listen to it and then you do what you want to do. And I figured out how to work with him—he gives you line readings and then you go and do it the way you want to. And if it's as good as or better than what he expected, he'll let you do it your own way."

In other words, Cherilyn Sarkasian found out how to get her wish. Meryl Streep has publicly lauded Cher as "an instinctive actress" possessing "rare honesty." For the time being, Cher says, she will wait for the reaction to Mask before sketching her next career move, as she did after Silkwood.

At one point during the making of Mask, Cher paid Sam Elliott—her on-screen boyfriend—a compliment about being rather excellent for an actor who isn't too famous. "I had never heard of him," Cher says, laughing. "But he was fabulous and I said to him, 'Sam, how come people haven't had the chance to see how fabulous you are?' And he said to me, 'How come it took you so long?'

Now that Cher is making her mark as a serious actress, filmmakers are starting to wonder why it took them so long to sense her potential. At least, now that the actress dream has become a reality, she has arrived with her autograph already perfected.
Candy is Dandy

John Candy eats up another plum role.

Like Saturday Night Live before it, the insanely funny television series SCTV trained, polished and launched an impressive quota of film stars, including Rick Moranis (Strange Brew, Ghostbusters, Streets of Fire) Dave Thomas (Strange Brew) and Eugene Levy (Splash, Ghostbusters). But John Candy may wind up the most visible of this SCTV-bred comedy crop — as much for the bulk of his rotund 6'3" physique as for the quantity of plum comic roles he's asked to play.

A veteran of 1941, Stripes, The Blues Brothers, Splash and National Lampoon Vacation, Candy doesn't even have to wait for the new roles to materialize. As a two-time Emmy winner for his SCTV writing skills, Candy can create new characters seemingly as fast as the cameras can record them. His impersonation of opera great Luciano Pavarotti for an SCTV spoof of The Godfather was so accurate, Italian extras hired for the scene broke into applause. He is also deadly funny as Orson Welles, the outrageous transvestite Divine, Tip O'Neill and even (with trick camera assistance) as the dwarf Herve Villechaize from Fantasy Island.

Candy's newest exposure includes a film part alongside megastar Richard Pryor and a cable TV special. Yosh Shmenge comes back to life for an HBO special called The Last Polka, alongside brother Stan Shmenge and the many regular guests of their musical offering for homesick Lutonian immigrants; on the larger screen, Candy puts his frame behind home plate as the catcher on a small town, semi-pro baseball outfit. He's Richard Pryor's best friend on the squad and his main accomplice as Pryor — the heir to millions of dollars in Universal's contemporary version of the timeless Brewster's Millions — has to go on a spending marathon to prove he's worthy to inherit an even more sizeable fortune.

It's a stalwart second banana role, the type of thing that Candy already fulfilled alongside Tom Hanks in Splash. Beyond Brewster's Millions and The Last Polka, Candy hasn't announced specific new plans. However, Disney Studios announced last spring that they had signed Candy to produce three movies. The contract allows him freedom to appear in productions for other studios and gives Candy some of the clout enjoyed by other people — including Eddie Murphy, Richard Pryor and Michael Keaton — with similar production deals. It's fairly certain, however, that Candy will stick with comedy. "I'm still a little nervous about doing drama," he admits. n

At the final audition, Bogdanovich made me put pantyhose over my face with holes in the mouth and through the eyes — it was a pretty interesting audition."

Once the actual shooting started, Stoltz was faced with a rather grueling off-screen challenge. "Every day," he recalls, "I had to spend about three-and-a-half to four hours in the makeup chair. On some days it went up to seven and eight hours. We were shooting in the summer and the makeup was just like wearing several ski masks all at once.

Bogdanovich, for one, thinks Stoltz' effort was worthwhile. "He had to project everything through his eyes," the director says. "I can't emphasize his achievement in this film enough."

Stoltz studied acting for two years at USC. "I became disillusioned with the academic approach, though," he says. Leaving school, he first sought roles in a number of plays.

"I've been studying at the Loft Studio and privately I have a coach who helped me out a great deal on Mask," Stoltz says.

Next in the 22-year-old's career is a recently completed European production called Emerald, costarring Ed Harris (The Right Stuff, Places in the Heart) and Max Von Sydow. n

Jeff Goldblum

Into the Night
Marks First Lead Role

Some actors get inside their roles; Jeff Goldblum prefers to ride on top. Whether he’s playing “New Jersey,” the doctor-turned-adventurer of Buckaroo Banzai, the seasick NASA aide of The Right Stuff or the cynical writer of puff pieces for People magazine in The Big Chill, a big part of each character is Goldblum’s own distinctive self. It’s no easy self to define: vulnerable and manipulative all at once. manic, charming and gifted with split-second timing. Combine those crisscrossing attributes with lanky height and a nervously charged voice and you understand why Goldblum (pronounced Godblum) could never be one of those actors who fades into a part, submerging their off-screen personality. Thus far, Goldblum has lent his presence to supporting parts and cameos. Now, with the upcoming John Landis film called Into the Night, opening in March, he steps into a leading role.

“They’re calling it a ‘dangerous romance,’" says Goldblum, flashing a flirtatious smirk, "so I guess I’m the dangerous romantic lead.

“I play a man who has come to a dead end in his life. I cross paths with an attractive young woman. She’s in the middle of troubles involving high financial stakes.”

Mixed into the plot are several surprise-choice cameos and bit parts: performers David Bowie and Dan Aykroyd, directors Paul Mazursky (Moonstruck), Lawrence Kasdan (The Big Chill), Roger Vadim (Barbarella), David Cronenberg (Scanners), Jonathan Demme (Melvin and Howard) and Richard Franklin (Psycho II).

Goldblum, 32, chose an acting career while in high school, but kept that plan secret. Bypassing college, he left his Pittsburgh home for New York to study acting, soon winning an apprenticeship... at Sanford Meisner's Neighborhood Playhouse.
A year later, Goldblum's height won him a minor role as a guard in a Joseph Papp Central Park production of Two Gentlemen of Verona. When the show moved to Broadway, Goldblum moved with it.

Weather dictated his next break. In 1973, Goldblum was in the stage comedy El Grande de Cerveza. Director Robert Altman, then at a career peak following M.A.S.H. and McCabe and Mrs. Miller, caught a performance and liked what he saw in the rangy character actor. "He had only come in the theatre to escape a blizzard," says Goldblum. Whatever the reason, Altman offered him small roles in California Split and Nashville.

There followed a number of bit parts, each increasingly larger and juicier. In Next Stop Greenwich Village he was a keyed-up actor who, awaiting a tryout, imagines so intensely that he'll be rejected that he storms out of the room in a fine froth. In Between the Lines he was a rock critic for an underground Boston newspaper who sold his freebie albums and gave lectures entitled "Whither Rock and Roll" to gullible coeds in order to sneak by without working. For the 1979 version of Invasion of the Body Snatchers he played a mud-bath proprietor. In Annie Hall he was on screen for a few memorable moments as a California partygoer who phones his guru because he's forgotten his mantra. A short-lived TV series, The Boatman and Bronsway, in which he co-starred with Ben Vereen, also added to Goldblum's reputation.

But his appearance in Lawrence Kasdan's bittersweet comedy The Big Chill boosted Goldblum several notches above his cult status he had been attaining. As once-radical journalist now successfully employed as a gossip-mongering hack, Goldblum was a standout among a cast that seemed to include nearly every talented actor (William Hurt, Kevin Kline, Mary Kay Place, Glenn Close, JoBeth Williams) of the baby-boomer generation. Goldblum's part represented an irony and disappointment felt by many of the generation. As The Big Chill went on to become an unqualified box office success, Kasdan gave major credit to Goldblum's "comic genius."

Goldblum then returned to television as a comic in the docudrama Between the Laughs. Kovacs, who experimented boldly in his early Fifties comedy show, is thought by many to have been a genius.

"He was much adored," says Goldblum, "and there's a group of people who really worship him. Taking on that character was a real challenge."

Now comes Into the Night, written by Ron Kolsow, Goldblum's first movie to call his own. After supporting the likes of Donald Sutherland, Sam Shepard and Peter Weller, it's the tall, intense guy's turn to be that "dangerous romantic lead."

For this major career step, Goldblum enjoys powerful help behind the camera. Into the Night's director is John Landis, who has also directed Trading Places, Animal House and The Blues Brothers.

"I think he's great," says Goldblum. "He has the best kind of enthusiasm for work and it's infectious. He's great fun to work with."
Peter Bogdanovich

Aims for the Heart

Saint Jack [the titular character in Bogdanovich's ninth feature film, for example, is a pimp, yet he does something noble that even a President wouldn't do. They All Laughed is all about appearances, as are Daisy Miller and Paper Moon. So Mask goes right to the heart of a lot of things that interest me.]

Bogdanovich is also linked to the theme of appearances by his tragic love affair with former Playboy Playmate of the Year, Dorothy Stratten. In fact, the main reason that the director has not made a film since They All Laughed (which co-starred Stratten in 1980), is that he's spent the better part of the last four years writing The Killing of the Unicorn: Dorothy Stratten (1960-1980).

"If you read the book you'll see that Mask has an element that even relates to Dorothy's story," says Bogdanovich. "She was fascinated by The Elephant Man — the play — because she identified with him. You see, in many ways, beauty is just as much a barrier to communication as ugliness is. And so is notoriety, and so is celebrity, and so is fame and so is money.

Asked what he thought of Star 80, the Bob Fosse film loosely based on Stratten's life, Bogdanovich raises the pitch of his voice: "Star 80 is badly made and has nothing whatsoever to do with what happened."

Bogdanovich is equally candid in assessing his own body of work. "There are two pictures that I think are poorly executed — for a variety of reasons — and those are At Long Last Love and Nickelsotron." He expresses affection for The Last Picture Show, What's Up, Doc!, Paper Moon and Daisy Miller, but Bogdanovich feels that Saint Jack and They All Laughed are probably his two best films. "Saint Jack and They All Laughed were also more ambitious than the others," says the director. "as well as being somewhat more complicated and difficult to make."

In terms of difficulty and complications, Bogdanovich ranks Mask right up there at the top of his list. "Getting the makeup right was a real challenge — especially in color — so we did ten or twelve tests and it underwent many many changes because we wanted the boy's face to look just like the real character's face. And you know what? When the real boy's mother came on the set and saw Eric [Stoltz] she said: 'He looks like Rocky, but even more important, he acts like Rocky' — which was really quite something.

Walter Hill

Aims for Laughter

Imagine trying to spend $30 million in 30 days — without acquiring any assets. Think you could do it? Bet you wouldn't mind trying. That's the infailling premise of Walter Hill's new comedy, Brewster's Millions, which stars Richard Pryor and John Candy.

Actually, the word "new" should probably be put in quotation marks. Brewster's Millions has been filmed six times before, under different titles, the first a silent version which starred Fatty Arbuckle in 1914. Script for the current version came from the writing team responsible for the Eddie Murphy smash Trading Places, Timothy Harris and Herschel Weingrod.

How does such an oft-told tale keep its perennial appeal? Director Walter Hill, best known for his gangland films like 48 HRS. and Streets of Fire, describes Brewster's Millions as "an attempt to plug into that universal fantasy of getting rich quick, which of course, like most things, is never quite that simple. It's probably been around so long," says Hill, "because there's something really fascinating about the notion of falling into sudden wealth due to some long lost relative."

Then, too, as Hill notes, "What's kind of nitly about the whole situation is that you have to spend a lot of money in order to get really rich."

What's really rich? All previous versions of the film found Monty Brewster having to squander $1 million in 30 days. In Hill's remake, Brewster (Richard Pryor) has to spend $80 million in the same period of time in order to inherit $300 million. Times (and inflation rates) have changed. Moreover, as Hill tells it, the real tough part of Monty Brewster's task is that "spending $30 million in 30 days and not having any assets to show for it, is actually a very difficult task."

Brewster's Millions is Walter Hill's eighth directorial effort. What made him decide to embark on his first full-fledged comedy? "The producers of this picture knew that I was anxious to do comedy as well as action films. But since I got started as an action director, I never really had been offered the chance to direct a comedy. Then, because 48 HRS. was such a mix of comedy and action — and since it was successful — I got the chance to do Brewer.

“My ideal state” Hill enthuses, “would be to do an action picture and then a comedy, and for every other action picture, a western. But, as Brewer finds out, nothing’s ever really that simple.”

Brewster is played by the inimitable Richard Pryor. “The problem I had working with Pryor,” says Hill, “was that at first I was probably a little too much in awe of him, because to me Richard Pryor is just an amazing talent.

“What Richard is in this movie is not so much a comedian, but that rarest of things — what used to be referred to as a ‘light leading man.’ There are very few of those around.”

In addition to Pryor, who plays a relief pitcher for a minor league baseball team in Hackensack, New Jersey, Brewer’s Millions, which opens in May, also features John Candy, who portrays Brewer’s best buddy.

Brewer’s Millions’ budget is the largest Hill has ever worked with. In order to convey the needed opulence, production designer John Vailone built a number of lavish sets on big sound stages. These sets included an elaborate French Provincial design for the hotel suite that Pryor rents for $1 million a month. Later in the shooting, this set was redesigned (according to the script’s requirements) to a Florid Italian Renaissance nightmare (complete with working water fountain), to a vivid post-modern environment (which included tables resting on bowling ball legs) and finally to a stark Bauhaus look.

In view of all the fine talent and production values that Brewer’s Millions has going for it, does Hill anticipate a major hit? “One of the most difficult things in the world,” says Hill, “is to figure out what somebody’s going to want to see a year from now.”

“But look, if you add up all the movies that I’ve been creatively involved with — what they cost and what they made — I’m way ahead. And in this business, that’s more than anyone can really expect. So all I can say is that I’ve been pretty lucky.”

Kanew Horizons

Nerds, Gotcha Director Started Small

At 17 Kanew scored a part-time job in the trailer department of United Artists. He had dreams of being a rock ‘n’ roll star, but discovered instead a promising future in his unexpected talent for promoting full-length movies with three-minute reels.

He soon formed his own outfit, Utopia Productions, and created trailers for such films as The Graduate, Midnight Cowboy, Rocky and a number of Woody Allen’s movies.

In the simplest sense, a trailer must compress the maximum of action and mood into a very small space. Making trailers educated Kanew on several of filmmaking’s finer points. In short order, the urge to rock and roll took a back seat to Kanew’s growing desire to direct movies.

In 1971 he directed Black Rodeo, a highly-praised feature-length documentary about a Harlem rodeo. Six years later he sold Utopia to finance Natural Enemies, which he also wrote and directed. It was a thoroughly downbeat story about a disillusioned man who kills his own family then turns his gun on himself. “It was the saddest film ever made,” Kanew says.

When that attempt flopped, Kanew took the job of editing the work of another first-time director, Robert Redford. The film in question, Ordinary People, went on to win the Oscar as Best Picture of 1980.

Since prestige attaches to those linked with a Hollywood winner, Kanew was able to climb into the director’s chair once more. This time, creating Revenge of the Nerds, he shifted wisely to an upbeat story. Gotcha, which continues that light-hearted trend, is a romance involving a college student and a CIA spy.

“I’m a little surprised to learn I have a knack for light entertainment,” Kanew says, referring to his forgotten heavy-drama debut. “The light stuff is fun to do.”
I didn't buy my car stereo backwards.

Why should you?

My car stereo dealer told me if you want clean, clear accurate sound—choose your speakers first. Because if the speakers can't handle it, you won't hear it. No matter what kind of sound your receiver pulls in.

Then he told me: Jensen!

If you want to hear it the way they played it, choose Jensen speakers first. Jensen invented car speakers in the first place. And they're a leader today. Simply because they know how to deliver the goods.

Naturally I got a Jensen receiver to go with my Jensen speakers. Great team, designed to play best together. Makes sense. Makes great sound, too. I want to hear it all. With Jensen, I do.

Nerds Team Reunites

Kanew and Edwards Create Comic Spy Thriller

"I feel really lucky to do another movie with Jeff."

Kanew calls his teaming with Edwards "a two-man repertory company."

"I feel really lucky to do another movie with Jeff," Edwards says. "The rapport between the actor and the director is so important and we get along so well. It makes it much easier to communicate."

"Jeff's a very sensitive, caring guy," adds Edwards, whose credits also include Fast Times at Ridgemont High and Heat Like a Wheel. "He wants most of all to care about the people in his movies. As a result, his characters have a wide range of feelings and come across as human."

That's the ingredient, explains Edwards, that turned Revenge of the Nerds into a comedy which nonetheless struck deep emotions.

"The studio wanted another Pulp Fiction," says Edwards. "We think we gave them something with a little substance instead."

If Edwards seems extremely loyal, he owes his job on this film to Kanew's persistence. Some high-level doubters wouldn't believe that the star of a movie about nerds could play a convincing romantic lead. Kanew did some powerful persuading.

"Anthony is a very creative actor who adds a lot in terms of humor to almost every scene," says Kanew. "And he's absolutely the character in Gatcha. He's healthy, wholesome, kind of naive, yet underneath a strong person."

In the closing moments of Gatcha's script, Jonathan, Sasha and Vlad re-cross paths back at the campus turf. Jonathan has learned so well in his game-playing forums. By now he's been exposed to love, danger and deceit; he isn't a silly sophomore any longer. But it's an open question whether he'll live long enough to enjoy his new-found maturity. Hitchcock himself couldn't bring matters down any closer to the wire. —

Students Play the Murder Game

Weather called "Gotcha" (as in the new film of the same name), "Killer" or "KAOS" (Killing As Organized Sport), a make-believe murder fad swept college campuses in the early Eighties. It annoyed college administrators, whose security forces kept flushed toy gun-armed assaultants out of campus shrubbery, but it delighted the imaginations of Hollywood screenwriters.

Players were drawn into the game with a newspaper or bulletin board ad. When enough players had been collected — sometimes as many as 20 or 30 — each wrote their personal "dossier" and entrusted it to a leader, who directed the game without playing it. Players were secretly given another player's dossier, a dart gun and three suction-cup darts. The last player "alive" was the winner, but prizes were also given for the most creatively sneaky "kills."

By some reports, the game originated in 1978 at the University of Michigan. It migrated during Spring Break to the campuses of Florida, eventually spreading west to UCLA and points in between.

Among the legends of the sport are Michigan man who dressed as a United Parcel delivery man to deliver a "jethal" dart, and a Florida coed who wangled a date with her unsuspecting victim, lured him into her apartment and annihilated him at close range.
