New Approach Is Plan Of RLC
A new approach to an old problem is being planned by the Student Senate of Idaho College to be known as RLC or Reflective Learning Communities. Carmae, Moscow, and visiting students are participating in the planning of RLC, and have had meetings in the newly created groups to find what is important to pursue and what is not.

The students have had brainstorming meetings with Mr. W. Lee Dorst, Retired Professor of Computer Science. "They make references to the community's existing curriculums to determine if the new curriculum is the same from which all purpose is considered," Dorst said.

Dear Jason,

In a restaurant of Argon-aut's famous "All You Can Eat Buffet" on the first floor of the Argonaut, a young man was seen talking to an older man. The young man, dressed in casual attire, appeared to be engaging in a serious conversation with the older man, who was sitting at a table by himself. The older man was dressed in a suit and tie, and he seemed to be listening intently to the young man's words.

The conversation continued for some time, and the young man finally stood up, shook hands with the older man, and left the restaurant. The older man watched him go, a small smile playing on his lips.

As the young man walked out of the restaurant, he noticed a small crowd had gathered around a woman who was standing on the sidewalk. The woman was holding a sign that read "Lost Dog." The young man approached the crowd and asked what had happened.

"We just found this little dog in the street," the woman explained. "We don't know where he came from, but we want to make sure he gets home safely."

The young man looked down at the dog and saw that it was a small, fluffy puppy, with big brown eyes and a wagging tail. He took a deep breath and said, "I'll help you find his owner."

The crowd thanked him, and the woman handed him the sign. The young man began asking questions to the people in the crowd, trying to find out more about the dog. Eventually, he discovered that the dog's name was "Buddy," and that he had been missing for several days.

The young man spent the next few hours searching the neighborhood, trying to find Buddy's owner. He talked to everyone he met, and even posted flyers on the nearby stores.

Finally, after several hours of searching, the young man found Buddy's owner. The woman was relieved to see her dog again, and she thanked the young man profusely.

The young man shook hands with the owner and said good-bye, feeling proud of himself for helping to reunite Buddy with his family. As he walked away, he realized that even though he didn't have any money or fame, he had found something even more valuable: the satisfaction of helping others.

With a smile on his face, the young man continued down the street, feeling happy and content. He knew that even though he was just a simple restaurant worker, he had made a difference in the lives of others. And that, he thought, was the true meaning of life.

Civic Organizations Draw Student Members From U-I

By Fred Freeman

"Draw and grow" is a fitting phrase that often occurs in discussions between a university and its community in which it is located. In Montana the term can apply to a special relationship that has been established between the University of Montana and the Missoula civic organizations. This relationship consists of 15 civic organizations and the University. All members of the civic organizations are men who are students at the University. One Missoula organization draws an entire class on University campus.

Two organizations, the Montana Club and the Missoulian Plus Club, provide框架 members with assistance and leadership. The Montana Club is the campus branch of the society of the same name.

Some leadership from University and civic organizations is now an an easily visible in the young men's drive to become members of these organizations. How so many students place value on the connections they can establish through these organizations. The University is not the only civic organization that offers leadership opportunities. Many civic organizations that serve the local community offer leadership opportunities. One opportunity that was offered through the community organization is the Montana Club. The Montana Club is a leadership opportunity that is open to all students.
