Amendment defeated by faculty, 'sex' still in bill of rights

The student vote as presented by William F. Forster was for acceptance of the amendment as presented to the council. "Each living group would be able to set whatever rules it desires," said William F. Forster, a member of the bill of rights. The amendment would be "inoffensive, harmless, and would be allowed in a living group after the living group's approval."

Wolpert noted the provision could be removed during the final stage of consideration. "I am encouraged to see that the members of the bill of rights are now making a final decision," said Wolpert.

The final decision would be made by the council, said Wolf. "We believe that the amendment was a product of the people, and that the people should be in the loop at the end."

The amendment would provide for the nature of the amendment to be presented to the council. "The amendment would be presented to the council, and the council would be able to make a final decision," said Wolpert.

Parent's club meeting

Parents of the university were invited to a meeting last night. The meeting was held by the Parent's club, and was attended by about 100 people.

"We hope to have more meetings like this," said one of the parents. "We think that the university should be more open to parents, and that we should be involved in the decision-making process."
Legislatures prohibit question from ballot but U.S. Senate approves 18 year-old vote

The Idaho Daily Statesman

There is irony in the fact that the state's two major newspapers supported the State Senate's anti-busing proposal and then the Senate voted against the pro-busing initiative that the State Senate had itself supported. The Idaho State Senate did not vote on the question of whether to ratify the new state constitution.

The Senate was voting on a proposal to prohibit the question of whether the state should ratify the new state constitution. The bill, known as Senate Bill 1, was introduced by Sen. S. Jones, R-Boise, and was designed to prevent the state from ratifying the new state constitution.

The bill passed on a 17-17 vote, with 17 senators voting yes and 17 senators voting no. The bill was then sent to the House of Representatives, where it was expected to pass with ease.

However, the bill was subsequently amended in the House to include a provision that would prohibit the state from ratifying the new state constitution. The amended version of the bill then passed the House on a 51-0 vote.

The amended bill was then sent back to the Senate, where it was expected to be rejected. However, the Senate ultimately approved the amendment, and the bill was sent to the governor for signature.

The governor signed the bill into law on Thursday, June 16, 1988.

The Palouse Parachute Club competed in the First Northwest Collegiate Parachute Championships held during spring vacations. The club was represented by two University of Idaho and Washington State parachute teams. They took part in two parachute events, two targets and five targets.

Wildlife researcher tells man dooms polar bear

"The polar bear, quickly and many other animals are doomed unless man learns to control his population," Dr. Charles Jones, research assistant, Carlsbad Wildlife Services, Ottawa, told an audience at the University of Idaho Thursday.

"In a remarkable meeting of the faculty of Sigma Xi, Dr. Jones related, "Beasts and man have always been companions. They have traditionally cooperated for space and for a home for food. However, the human population has grown, this cooperative behavior has been broken, and now there isn't any room left for the animals."

"Beast as a real challenge and food for man and in one which may ultimately destroy his survival. We can hope to live with these animals, but we may be able to live in peace with each other. Otherwise, our destruction may come sooner than we think."

"Commercial hunting is an essential tool in the control of the animal so far," Dr. Jones added.

"Due to economic pressures, all companies who operate with the animal have been forced to reduce their activities. Instead of waiting for the animal to die out, however, they began exploring xenotrophic and cloning procedures for use in Texas. This is a frightening idea because it means the possibility of conversion.

"An ad is out in this country with the headline, 'The world is dying, but the Arctic is alive.' We don't know exactly what will do to the future, but we do know it would be bolder on its environment and the efforts of all the California eminent scientists."

"As a conservationist, I am not against such an exploration. I’ve just asked the companies to go slow and develop proper procedures."

Graduate artist exhibits works in foreign lands

Le Marley, a 22-year-old graduate of the University of Idaho, is exhibiting paintings and drawings to interest the American and European State Department, 10-22, on a 10-day trip to Europe. A trip to 15 in the United States, Idaho. Following the close of the formal exhibit, Ms. Le Marley will travel to Belgium, Switzerland, to interest in her works to aid in creating exhibits.
Special institute scheduled to interest minority students

A new institute that will focus on efforts to attract minority students to higher education will be announced at the University of Idaho today.

The University of Idaho, in conjunction with the Idaho Black Caucus, is planning to introduce the new institute, which will be housed in the Department of Social Sciences.

The institute will be housed in a new building located on the University of Idaho campus and will be open to all students, regardless of race or ethnicity.

The goal of the institute is to increase minority enrollment at the University of Idaho and to provide a supportive environment for minority students.

The institute will offer a variety of programs and services to promote diversity and inclusion, including mentoring programs, cultural events, and academic support services.

The institute will also serve as a research hub to study the challenges faced by minority students and to develop strategies for addressing these challenges.

The announcement of the new institute is expected to be well-received by the University of Idaho community and will be a significant step forward in the university's efforts to increase diversity and inclusion.

The institute is expected to open its doors in the fall of 2023.

'Spring flush' means dirty water

By Mike Wilks

It's spring again and that means dirty water. It's like the annual "spring flush" in Moscow where all the runoff from the past winter's snowwater is allowed to flow into the Snake river. This means that the river level usually rises, and the water may look brown to red in color.

This week, the Snake river near Idaho Falls is expected to rise again as a result of the spring runoff. The water color is due to the presence of iron, manganese, and other minerals that leach from the soil during the winter months.

Terry Bailey of Idaho Power Corp. says, "We need to know what the iron content is in the spring and in certain months. That's why we need to monitor the river's water quality."

He explains that the decrease in water quality occurs because of the spring season when the snow melts and the water flow increases. This makes it important to monitor the water quality to ensure that it meets the standards set by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The type of minerals present in the water can vary depending on the location and the time of year. For example, the water quality near Moscow may be different from that near Idaho Falls.

The Idaho Power Corp. is working to improve water quality in the Snake river to meet the standards set by the EPA. They are conducting regular monitoring and testing to ensure that the water meets the required standards.

Enrollment at WSU must be limited for first time in 80-year history

For the first time in its history, Washington State University will limit enrollment.

Enrollment at the university will be limited to 16,000 students, a reduction from last year's total of 16,500. The university will not admit any new students after admission applications are due on September 30, but it will continue to accept applications after that date.

The decision to limit enrollment was made due to the COVID-19 pandemic and the resulting uncertainty about the future of the university.

In addition, the number of students who can be admitted will be limited to 3,000. The university will not admit any new students after admission applications are due on September 30, but it will continue to accept applications after that date.

The new enrollment limit will be in effect for the 2021-2022 academic year. The university will not admit any new students after admission applications are due on September 30, but it will continue to accept applications after that date.

War dances to be featured by Upward Bound program

On May 14, 2023, at the University of Idaho, students will present war dances from the Yurok and Nez Perce tribes as part of a larger presentation on Native American culture. The Upward Bound program, which offers educational opportunities to students from economically disadvantaged backgrounds, will host the event.

The war dances will be performed by members of the Yurok and Nez Perce tribes. The Yurok tribe is one of the largest Native American tribes in California and is known for its rich cultural heritage.

The Nez Perce tribe is a Native American tribe that has a long history of warfare. The tribe is known for its warrior traditions and its role in the Battle of the Little Bighorn.

The event will be held at the University of Idaho's Kibler Center, which is located near the Yurok tribe's reservation.

Vandals end busy week--only to start another

By Chuck Malloy

The Idaho State Vandals had a busy week. Strong spring weather they have won four baseball games in the past seven days, and they are still going strong. Their last game was on Tuesday, April 2, and they dominated their opponent, the Utah State Aggies, winning 10-4 and breaking into the NCAAL tournament race. The Vandals are currently ranked 16th in the nation and have a record of 29-5.

Loss to Puget Sound

To review the Banana Belt Tournament at Tacoma this past weekend, the Vandals faced off against the Puget Sound Loggers. The game was a battle of two evenly matched teams, with the Vandals winning 5-4 in extra innings. Idaho State's offense was led by Danny Denham, who had a career-high seven hits and scored four runs. The Vandals' pitching was also strong, with junior Ryan Smith earning the win, throwing six shutout innings. The Loggers' best performer was sophomore Kelli Klappach, who pitched well but couldn't prevent the Vandals from scoring. The victory extended Idaho State's winning streak to five games and moved them closer to the top of the league standings.

Barry wants out

If you're sitting on the fence about Barry Bonds wanting to start in the outfield for the San Francisco Giants, you're not alone. The Giants are evaluating their options, and Barry wants to return to the outfield to prove he's still a star. Bonds, who is currently playing in the DH role, told his agent that he wants to play in the outfield to give the Giants more flexibility and increase his odds of winning the Most Valuable Player award. The Giants are considering a trade, but Barry's willingness to move to the outfield could make it easier for them to sign the legendary slugger. Barry's decision to start in the outfield could also boost his chances of winning his fifth World Series title and continue his pursuit of��

Hendren selected for bowl game

Eupene's Hunter Hendren has been selected to play in the Hula Bowl American Football Game June 1 at Lahaina, Hawaii. Hendren, a 6-foot-2, 220-pound defensive end from Utah State, will represent Idaho State University in the prestigious bowl game. Hendren, who is known for his speed and agility, has been a key player for the Vandals and is expected to excel on the Hawaiian island of Maui. The Hula Bowl is one of the top bowl games for college football players and is a great opportunity for Hendren to showcase his skills and potentially land a professional contract.
