Boise State president says law school should remain at University of Idaho

Boise State president, Dr. Robert Coonrod, announced on Friday that the university's law school should remain at the University of Idaho. Coonrod said the decision was made after careful consideration and analysis of various factors.

"I believe it's in the best interest of our students and the state of Idaho for the law school to remain at the University of Idaho," Coonrod said. "We have strong relationships with the Idaho legal community and have a proven track record of producing graduates who are well-prepared for careers in law."

The decision was based on several factors, including the university's financial situation, the quality of the law school, and the benefits of having a law school in the state.

"We have met with the Board of Regents and other stakeholders to discuss the future of the law school," Coonrod said. "We have considered a range of options, including moving the law school to Boise State. However, we believe the best outcome for our students and the state is to keep the law school at the University of Idaho."

Editor, the Argonaut:

It would be a compliment to the dedicated people of Blue Key for promoting an auto show which the students of the College of Business, M.C.'s, the judges, and the vendors were all extremely pleased with. The ability to produce such a show was most unusual. Fortunately, two Blue Key's and all members were able to draw simple instructions with their well-organized, efficient, and willing vendors.

Astonishing the show the vendors were able to start their balancing on the buds and considering the two buds would be distant or not playing at all. The show was going off without any problems.

Miller: the keynote for the Blue Key for this year as we can see the students were wonderful people. We're ready to see you in next year.

Electricity fails again; call finished.

It happened again—the lights went out. You get out your candle, still fairly handy back when everything burned, and light it while the candle is burning, you figure out why the electricity failed again.

While you are fishing out that light bulb, your phone rings twice. What do they call this when the lights fail? Never mind, it's your local manager of Washington Public Power Co. traced for the standard process of restoring power, you say, "Okay, what's the problem now?"

"There is a wide area that has no power," he says. "Try to get to the nearest street light or traffic signal to see if that one is out."

You drove to the corner of your street and indeed, there was no traffic light. You walked to the road and there was no street light either. You guess that is the problem in the area.

"Okay, we'll see what we can do."

You go home and wonder how you are going to cook dinner. You might as well try to light a drumstick in a candle. "I'm off to a good start," you say to yourself. "This can't be the end of the world."

Recreation expenditures approved

The board of the University of Idaho approved the expenditure of $850 for recreation purposes. The expenditure, according to President Barnhart, will be used to purchase equipment for the recreation program. The equipment will be used for various activities such as tennis, swimming, and other outdoor recreational pursuits.

Foreign students need homes during holidays

Spending Christmas vacation on campus can be a happy prospect, and a group of concerned persons are offering homes to foreign students who are planning to be on campus a few days, a week, or longer.

This is being jointly sponsored by the foreign student host family group, the People to People Committee, and the foreign student roommate group.

Last year six or eight foreign students spent Christmas vacation on campus. This year the group has doubled the effort and two or three homes are being offered to each of the 12 foreign students from China, India, and Pakistan. A note to this effect was sent home with each student, but no requests have been made during this time.

Many homes were offered last year. Mrs. Fred Kennett, director of the program, said that the students in the homes were delighted and that many of them have already been determined.

Regents approve infirmity access for grad students

The Board of Regents has approved a proposal to give 22 graduate students access to the University infirmary as a result of their severe physical or mental handicaps. This action will bring the total number of graduate students served by the infirmary to 14.

The present is the result of a campaign conducted by the-yearly student Good Will Industries, and more paper will go to waste this Christmas.

Coach Anderson, fifth year as head mentor

Basketball Coach Dave Anderson is starting his fifth year as the head of the Vandal basketball program. Anderson has served as head baseball coach for one year and has also served as interim head basketball coach and assistant football coach. He has served under Bob Mathias, Don Hewson, Bob Garriott and has gained valuable knowledge from each of them.

Since he took his job, he has compiled a record of 16-18. His team has had an average of 7,000 fans per game which includes his past four seasons plus the beginning of this season. During his second year, he took the Vandal to a winning season, placed fifth in the Big Sky Conference and won the "Coach of the Year" award.

The new season

Anderson's leadership philosophy is that the basketball team will be served by the staff of the major basketball program. He believes in the combination of student-athletes and his coaching staff. His players have shown that they have the right kind of player to make the team a success. He has some changes in the team that is expected to improve the Vandal's record.

Ron Stephens resigns as post as assistant

Ron Stephens, assistant athletic director and sports information director, has resigned to pursue his career in the University of Idaho. His resignation was accepted by the University of Idaho. The position of assistant athletic director will be filled by a new individual.

The Vandal basketball season

The Vandal basketball season is in full swing. The team opened the season with a victory over the Idaho State University, 80-50. The next game is scheduled for December 15 against the Montana State Bobcats. The game will be held in Moscow's Milwaukee Auditorium. The game is expected to be a sellout.

Dream researchers experiment in all-night laboratories

A small group of psychologists clustered around the polygraph and waited for their subject in the dream research laboratory to arrive. Down the hall sometime later a girl with electrodes attached to her head walked and began to talk. The instrument clicked and the pattern connected to the complex and delicate electrical equipment was read on the subject's chart.

Dream research, known as dream lab, will begin serious experimentation next semester, according to Dr. William Bergquist, associate professor of psychology, who is in a full-packing program. "If we're going to do our experiments right, we must have a set-up to begin with," he said.

Located in the third floor of the Student Health Center, the dream lab is operated by members of the psychology department, students and graduate students. Presently experimentation is conducted only twice a week, but by spring the research should go on five times a week.

"We'll be trying to find out what dreams are all about," Dr. Bergquist said. "Recent research indicates that dreaming may not be unique, that it may occur when people are severely under conditions of the sensory real." But these are temporary conditions, similar to those when people are dreaming, so people who they are awake combined.

A subject in dream lab session between 11 and 1:30 a.m., and is prepared for the experiment by the psychologist. Electrodes are attached to the rear portion of the head, on the side of the face, and the subject is asked to sit in a comfortable manner and it's not easy to learn.

"Girls are better for this than boys because they are used to sleeping with earlier on their heads," commented John Lloyd, a psychology graduate student, as he placed the electrodes on the subject.

"We give the electrodes then," Lloyd explained, "to mental and will immediately they use vowels."

The electrodes record eye movements, heart rate, physical impulses and changes in the amount of electrical energy given off by the brain. Slides changes in the patterns indicate to trained eyes when a person is truly dreaming.

By charting these changes over a period of time the subjects' ideas are suddenly revealed. The question is, when the next dream will probably occur for any given subject and how long it will last.

After the subject has entered the dreaming stage, he or she is woken up and asked to tell, through an interpreter, the exact words of what he or she dreamed. These words are grouped by the subject's dreams, as it is recorded, transcribed and later analyzed. The subject may want to talk about a dream later, and if so, it is encouraged.

Usually a person who is attached in the dream lab is a dreamer of regular, who remembers his dreams better than one who has been to sleep all right and then tries to recall everything from the right. In the way the researchers can gather more detailed information about the content of the dream.

"It is exciting for the subject. They become aware of all these new things, and the way we do it in the same way," he said.

"We do it sometimes, when a new part of the personality becomes open in the subject, it is enjoyable," Dr. Bergquist commented.

WHAT'S GOING THROUGH YOUR MIND — The subject is asked to consciousness through an intercom and answers the question, "What's been going through your mind?" The answers is tape-recorded and saved for future analysis.

CHARTING THE STAGES — As a subject passes through different levels of sleep, his or her progress is noted on a chart.
