Police looking for battery suspect

Shelby Dopp

A University of Idaho graduate student was attacked near the Alumni Recreation Center on Monday afternoon. According to the victim, a white male, approximately 1.70 meters (5'6"") tall, dressed in a white t-shirt and blue jeans, and wearing a black cap, was walking in the alley near the Alumni Recreation Center when he was attacked. The attacker used a black baseball bat to hit the victim in the head. The victim was taken to the hospital with non-life threatening injuries.

'What happened was a miracle. I was able to fight back. I was able to defend myself against the attack,' the victim said.

The police are currently investigating the case and are seeking information from anyone who may have seen the attacker or heard anything suspicious in the area around the time of the attack. The victim has not been identified at this time due to the ongoing investigation.

Anti-gay initiative debated in forum

Shelby Dopp

Approximately 30 people attended the Proposition Four Forum held in the Kibbie Dome on Friday. The forum was held in response to the recent decision by the University of Idaho to approve the proposal. The forum was intended to provide a space for students, faculty, and community members to discuss the proposal and its implications.

During the forum, many people shared their views on the proposal, stating that the proposal would harm the LGBTQ+ community and violate their rights. Others argued that the proposal was necessary to maintain minority status and to prevent the exclusion of students from the university.

Privacy in the home is an issue. The privacy of a person who does not want their home invaded is an issue. Privacy is a fundamental human right and should be protected. The proposal would not prevent the university from conducting searches of homes, but it would require that the search be conducted with a warrant. This is an important change.

The forum was a valuable opportunity for the university to engage in an open and honest discussion about the proposal. It is crucial that the university continue to listen to the concerns of the community and work to find a solution that is fair and just for all students.

French Canada debates taboo subject: World War II

Charles Trueheart
The Washington Post

MONTREAL—Commemorations of World War II milestones have unearnt, amid solemn remembrances of valor and victory, some aspects of the war that have caused shame and embarrassment: internment of Japanese-Americans in the United States, for example, or the stain of French accommodation to Vichy rule.

But the uncomfortable wartime experience of Quebec, Canada's French-speaking province, is a corner of collective memory that remains in the shadows.

To bring the matter to light, a group of scholars here has begun what one calls an "exorcism" of Quebec's war years—a possibly convulsive process that could help Quebec better understand the roots of its evolving nationalism, expressed today in the separatist movement.

This new self-examination, according to the intellectuals who are leading it, is an effort to set the record straight about the extensive participation of French Canadians in the Allied war effort—not as the British Empire's cannon fodder, as popular memory sometimes has it, but as heroic players in the struggle against fascism.

The time has come to debunk the mythology of "the Quebec "deserter," hiding under the skirts of his parish priest to stay out of the war," declared Berthe Richard, one of the historians leading the effort.

Her allusion is to a painful but indisputable fact that older French Canadians seldom acknowledge and English-speaking Canada has found hard to forget: Quebec did not share Canada's enthusiasm for the war against Nazi Germany, and many French Canadians refused to fight.

In the two short wars, contrasting sentiments have never been a mystery.

English-speaking Canadians regarded themselves as defenders of the British Empire virtually no less than the British themselves. But many French Canadians in large numbers had little taste for defending human liberties that they felt they had been denied at home.

France's own peril before the Nazi menace seemed to count for less among Quebecers—whom the French had abandoned to the British in Canada two centuries before—than their historic distance for fighting their oppressing culture's war.

The event that crystallized the social divide of Canada's wartime era was a 1942 national referendum called to empower the government to conscript troops. About 70 percent of Quebec voters said no. Elsewhere in Canada, 80 percent of voters said yes. The measure carried, and patriotic Anglo-Canadians have nursed a mostly silent grudge ever since.

Inside Quebec, meanwhile, the subject of French-Canadian participation in the war has been taboo. In the view of the scholars who gathered here recently to engage the issue, the historical record remains mainly "blank pages," as one put it, or a "hole in the collective memory," as did another.

"The silence can't go on forever," said Paul Andre Comeau, former editor of Le Devoir newspaper, "unless the intent is to bury the past."

Why the long silence?

Whatever its motives, French-Canadian isolationism and war resistance proved to have been shortsighted at best. "If ever there was a just war, this was it, but they don't want to hear about that," commented Gilbert Drolet, a military historian at Canada's Royal Military College in St. Jean, in an interview.

Richard offered another explanation. In Quebec, particularly among the elites and the clergy, the war in Europe had been deeply unpopular. The ties between Vichy and Montreal were close, and sympathy for Franco, Mussolini and Salazar was strong.

Arrival of the warring Allies, French Canadians who returned from battle—even, or perhaps especially, in victory—were accorded the same embarrassed glances that greeted many returning U.S. veterans from the Vietnam War. They were, she said, pariahs. Replacing the "silence" with a version of

Debate to be held Thursday

A debate between the ASUI presidential candidates will take place at 7 p.m. Nov. 10 in the University of Idaho Law Building Courtroom. Candidates Cade King, Sean Wilson and Brad Meloor will all participate.

Three different meetings are available for education majors who intend to do student teaching next year. The meetings will be Nov. 9 at 4:30 and 7 p.m. and Nov. 15 at 5:30 p.m. in Education 311. Applications for student teaching will be given out at the meetings.

FRIDAYS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF IDAHO:
Here is a fact as reported in Idaho Senate Journals, 1993 and 1994:

GARY SCHROEDER VOTED AGAINST FUNDING FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF IDAHO in 1993 (SB 1243) and 1994 (HB 907).

He claims to be "in line for leadership of Senate Education Committee." All legislators are in line for leadership of their respective committees. He would have to wait his turn before leadership would be his. AND, he voted for TERM LIMITS, so his term could expire before his opportunity came for leadership.

Bible was discussed as well.

"There is an uninterpretive way of looking at the Bible," Bruce Wollenberg, director of the UI Campus Christian Center, said.

Many felt proponents use the Bible as a convenient way of deciding what is right and what is wrong. Some people noted these proponents perceive homosexuality as perversion—some people have the misperception that homosexuals are rapists and child molesters just because they are gay or lesbian.

"There is no link in the New Testament of homosexuality being seen as perversion," Wollenberg said.

The final topic of discussion dealt with the possibility that true purpose of this bill is to get the people of Idaho to fear homosexuals and even keep homosexuals out of the state.

history that all Quebecers, and all Canadians, can live with is another matter.

Virtually every participant in the conference marshaled impressive evidence that Quebecers and French Canadians from other parts of Canada fought valiantly, and in sizable numbers—as one estimate, 130,000 volunteers and 60,000 conscrits, represented 30 percent of the eligible population. (French Canadians represented 130,000 of the Canadian population at the time.)

They fought in highly decorated French-speaking units and side by side with English-speaking Canadians at Dieppe and Normandy, in Sicily and at the Rhine. The conference were reminded that they even donned kilts to march with the Royal Black Watch of Canada.

EIGHTEEN thousand French Canadian died in the war, said Serge Bernier, a Canadian government historian.

The effort to address the silence is more than an effort to redress the image of Quebecers as laggards and malingerers, or as England’s expendable bodies. It also includes efforts to renew the wartime argument itself in the highly charged political context of 1994.

In that vein, Richard speculated that the misgivings of French Canadians might have been more than “a simple expression of refusal to fight. Might it just as easily have been the expression of opposition to a central power incapable of understanding the distinctiveness of French Canadian society?”

Yes, I Voted Against University of Idaho Budgets -

Budget Cuts That Is!

I'm concerned that for the last twenty years, the State of Idaho has devoted less and less of its budget to the University of Idaho. Enrollment has continued to grow. Recently, the U of I has had major increases in student enrollment, and record low state funding.

What's the result of this gradual drop in funding? Right now, we've seen increased out-of-state tuition to make up the difference, causing a drop in attendance by students who one no longer afford an education.

Eventually, if this trend continues, administrators may be forced to raise resident fees, and even out back on University programs - programs that provide jobs for Latah County residents.

I'm appalled at these and I'm appalled that she would against!

I can't put My Vote - My Stamp of Approval - on Inadequate Funding. I'm proud that I've voted AGAINST these University of Idaho budgets - Budget Cuts!!

dent volunteers to work at the campus shelter. CADRA also provides information to the campus police and clinic workers to teach them how to recognize domestic or dising violence.
According to Terri O'Sullivan, volunteer coordinator for Spouse Abuse, Inc., in Orlando, Fla., physical abuse can be anything from being pushed, shoved, punched, kicked or threatened with a weapon. She reports that 95 percent of college-age abuse victims are female, and that they are highly unlikely to confide in friends and parents about their situations. Most often they feel humiliation, shame and fear that others will counsel them to leave the relationship.
Today's college-age females suffer tremendous pressure from society to feel accepted, and their self-esteem depends on having a boyfriend, said O'Sullivan. "It's amazing. These beautiful girls let themselves get beat up. They're so afraid the men will drop them and won't come back. It's scary."
The Family Research Laboratory
at the University of New Hampshire reports that about 60 percent of battered wives say that the violence began when they were dating their fiancés. And often the cycle of violence is passed from generation to generation, say experts.
"If you scratch the surface, you'll always almost find they have been brought up in violent homes," Gelles said, noting that lack of respect for women or men displayed by caretakers is passed down to the next generation, and the cycle feeds on itself.
"Unfortunately there is still, in a lot of families, the mentality that men control women, and that what they do is in someone's relationship is no one else's business," noted O'Sullivan. "That gets passed down from generation to generation."
One survivor of date abuse, Jessica Benson, now at student at Endicott College in Beverly, Mass., was one of the lucky ones.
She managed to leave a turbulent relationship when she was 18 years old before it became habitually violent.
She recently penned an essay entitled, "Women and Violence: One Student's Personal Drama."
"As we experiment in relations with men, we learn about what is normal and acceptable behavior.
The inexperienced woman may find herself in love for the first time, and so may put up with her boyfriend's insecurity or jealousy.
Some women feel safe and attracted to a protective boyfriend. The actual abuse comes later, when the woman finds herself too caught up in the relationship."
Although the Simpson trial has made domestic violence a hot issue in the media, the subject of domestic violence was on the national agenda before the case broke. U.S.
Attorney General Janet Reno and U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Donna Shalala recently announced a hotline that offers information to victims.
also, President Clinton's mas-ive anti-crime bill, which received final approval in August, earmarks
$1.6 billion for the Violence Against Women Act, in which the federal government can provide grants to reduce domestic violence.
University-based programs are

Behind in the polls and endorsements before the election, the reforendum won anyway. Moreover, Hibbits never does think the Colorado court ruling will influence voters. "It's an emotional vote, not a vote based on what a judge says one way or the other,"
said.
The Oregon and Idaho proposals have virtually identical goals—not surprisingly, since the Idaho Citizens Alliance, the principal sponsor of that state's measure, is an offshoot of the OCA.
Both initiatives would prevent state and local government from adopting laws protecting gay men and lesbians from discrimination or recognizing same-sex partnerships.
The measures would further forbid
the spending of public money in any way that implies approval of homosexuality or its sympathetic treatment in public schools.
"The whole key is that there will be no the encouragement of it as an acceptable lifestyle," Mansfield
said.
In an effort to make this year's measure more palatable to Oregon voters, the OCA dropped the charged language of the 1992 pro-goal, which lumped homosexuality with pedophilia and condemned it as "abnormal, wrong, unnatural and perverse."
The group also has included writing intended to counter some of the more effective opposition arguments used two years ago—
that the constitutional amendment would bar the government licensing gay professionals and rid public library shelves of literary classics that contain even a hint of homosexuality.
But opponents argue that Measure 13, as it is known, is the same old thing wrapped in a premier package.
"It's legal discrimination," said
Danny Brandige of the "No on 13" campaign. "It's legal censorship. It curtails curriculum that can be taught."

Campus Safety
Before anyone even talked about lighting, Police, or women's safety, Sean was working with the Budget and Capital Planning office to have budgetary inclusions for these issues.

More Money For Students
Sean is the only candidate who has lobbied the legislature. RESULTS: The work study program received $500,000 for its FY 95 allocation, and is growing stronger all the time.

Parking
Sean is the only candidate who has religiously addressed the parking issue. RESULTS: One example of this effort is the cement factory behind the bookstore, which is soon to be turned into a parking lot.

Scholarship Development
Sean is the first senator in the history of ASUI to gain interest off of the $175,000 ASUI general reserve. Results: This money now goes into a trust fund where it grows and feeds a series of five, $500 scholarships.

Fight Student Fee Increases
Sean is the only candidate who fought student fee increases last spring.

ASUI PRESIDENT

PROVEN LEADERSHIP EXPERIENCE

MILSON

226-8477

ASUI should take center stage

For civil, state and federal offices, today is a day of reckoning. The votes cast today will rearrange the power structure in the short-term and have unpredictable political effects in the long-term. Many people will cast their vote thinking the political maneuvering and campaigning is done for another two years.

Not quite, at least not at the University of Idaho.

It's ASUI election time again, which means campaigning, debates and once again, the chance to have 'y' in how this university is run. After all, no matter who gets into any federal/state/city office you choose, the effects aren't going to be immediate or necessarily obvious. However, ASUI policies (being driven by student fees and other monies coming from, in one fashion or another, the pockets of the students) have a direct and immediate effect on our regulations, our fees, what programs are available here and so on.

This chance to take a part in how the machine functions is too good to let go by, but few take advantage of it. Voter turnout for campus elections has been, to put it mildly, miserable. Students need to be more aware of what's going on in the ASUI offices.

For instance, do you know how many Senate seats are open this coming election? In case you're curious, the answer is six. How many people are running for these seats? Seven, which may make the Senate race a little calmer than most, but no less important for all that. No matter which six get elected, those seats still have the same power.

Quiz question: Who's running for President? (Answer: Cade King, Brad Moeller and Sean Wilson). Are they qualified? (Answer: Decide for yourself. All three have served as part of the ASUI; King was ASUI President, Wilson as Senator, Moeller as Vice-President. In fact, all three are still active in student government beyond their campaigns). Who's running for Vice-President? (Damon Darjakly and Leonard Perry. Perry is running with Moeller and Darjakly is running with King. Wilson stands alone).

There are many, many more questions to be asked—everything from past records to stands on current issues. However, the best people to ask are the candidates themselves. They're available, and willing to answer questions.

So get involved and get informed. Ask King and Darjakly about their party ticket stands. Find Sean Wilson and ask him why he's running alone. Find Leonard Perry and quiz him about his ideas on ASUI policies or ethics codes. Locate any one running for a Senate seat and ask them why you should vote for them. You can call them at home or at the Senate office. Find out. Stand out from the anaphoric pack. Make yourself heard.

A modest proposal: big prizes answer to low voter turnout be Oliver North (who is doing rather well by the way), but voter apathy is rampant. Also, there's voter inipitude, which is equally widespread, and when coupled with outright laziness, America gets a whopping 30 percent turnout.

To combat this, we've got to offer Americans what they need most: prizes.

Everyone likes prizes. Everyone wants to win prizes. Everyone thinks they deserve a prize. The proposal to get a higher voter turnout is relatively simple.

For starters, we must offer a large prize. Voters aren't stupid, they know when you offer a prize you're not really serious and are only trying to temt them with trinkets.

I suggest a vehicle. In southern California, it's a Dodge Van. In the north, a Convertible. In southern Idaho, it would be a big, black 4-wheel drive pick-up truck with a loud stereo.

To be fair, vehicles would have to be raffled off, one entry per voter.

We can't have any racial or gender-specific discrimination, or contests that would require intelligence—literally; we would lose our non-white, non-men voters and would drop back down to a 30 percent turnout.

Next we would have stereo and personal massages given away at door prizes—one for the first and fifteenth voters, and every voter thereafter who enters on an increment of 50.

Fairly large prizes, like refrigerators/top-redable combos that could store a case of beer with ease would be won by voters who participated in contests in which several multiple-choice questions were asked. The questions would cover the main issues in the race including, of course, some irrelevant questions such as, "Who did Larry Laborgo have an affair with prior to entering office last voting season?"

This kind of question appeals to everyone and the multiple choice format gives everyone a chance to win if it's their lucky day.

Next comes the coupon book full of great, state-sponsored discounts on merchandise everyone needs. Also, local businesses would be encouraged to participate, though at their own cost.

This portion of the system would see that everyone gets something for nothing.

Last of all, the ballot boxes would have a pull-handle on the side of the box just like a slot machine does. As voters deposit their ballots, they would get one pull on the machine, where upon all the candidates' faces spin around and stop just like a slot machine does.

When three of the same faces stop (some of the two-faceted politicians would be forced to pick only one for the purposes of voting) quarters would spell out, bells would ring and lights would flash.

The ballot boxes would have to be placed strategically near the door to attract passersby as voters win. Surely, this modest proposal would cost some money, but at least the voters would be getting something tangible for their taxes. Besides, it would be fun America's own good—we can't continue being the model of democracy when only 30 percent of our voters turn out.

We have images to keep up.

Whisky, snow and a little sex

Jennifer Swift

We either like it or not, winter is here. Since last year was apparently a mild one, I have developed a list of things to do when it snows, just in case anyone has forgotten the endless possibilities.

1. Make snow cones.
2. Make snow cones with pure maple sugar on top.
3. Make snow balls.
4. Make anatomically correct snowwomen.
5. Make anatomically correct snowmen.
6. Go sledding on someone farmer's land; the hills around here look perfect for it.
7. Build a snow fort.
8. Have sex in the snow fort (don't forget your macaroni).
9. Drink whisky in the snow fort.
10. Drink whisky and then have sex in the snow fort.
11. Go skiing.
13. Declare war on your neighbors who have been really annoying with those noise complaints to the police and plaster their house with plaster.
14. Make snow angels (anatomically correct of course).
15. Catch snowflakes on your tongue (this makes you look REALLY intelligent).
16. After drinking whisky in your snow fort, run around campus singing 'Let it Snow' as loud as humanly possible.
17. Revise the Greek against residence hall annual snowball fight, and make it the best yet.
18. Enjoy the quiet a good snowfall creates.
19. Drink hot cocoa.
20. Drink hot cocoa with whisky in it (are you starting to detect a running theme here?).
21. Give your friend a white-wash.
22. Give your ex a white-wash.
23. Give your girlfriend a white-wash.
24. Write your name in the snow with...yes...you guys know.
25. Play King of the Mountain on the snow banks after the plows have come through.
26. After your friend has had too much of that whisky, create a flying abominable snowman...
27. Make a snow Koozie for keeping your cold after the whisky.
28. Slip chains on your tires and pretend you own a 4x4 the size of a semi.
29. Make strange shapes in the fresh snow and tell everyone alien landed there, like the guy in England did in the 90s.
30. Host a full moon keg, cross country ski out to it and see who ends up wrapping themselves and their skis around a tree trying to be Phil Mahker.
31. Build a tunnel in the snow banks between your house and the nearest bar after the snowplows have come through.
32. Just plain roll in it.

Argonaut shows fair coverage

I just wanted to congratulate you and your staff for doing such a great job of covering the November elections. You have provided good coverage of all the major candidates, and have been reasonably fair and objective in your news. This is important to me, since I am no longer in Idaho and rarely get Idaho news other than the Argonaut.

The elections in November are important and you have contributed a great deal towards helping to promote an informed electorate.

Benson too one-sided

On Monday, the two candidates for State Senate in District 5 participated in a call-in show with KUDI radio station. During the course of the show, Mrs. Betty Benson insulted running against the Republican party with some very spirited words. The episode conveyed Mrs. Benson's strong dislike or hate for the Republican party. Is this the type of person who would be an effective Senator for Latah County? I don't think so!

We need a senator who can work with all types of people, regardless of what political party they may belong to. We need a senator who can represent the County as a whole, and not one who has a radical, one-sided agenda.

We need to re-elect Senator Gary Schildt for these reasons. He has proven that he can represent the people rather than the party. Because he has been able to represent Latah County so effectively, he is supported by Republicans and Democrats alike. Keep Latah County's voice in the state legislature strong, and vote for Senator Gary Schildt.

—Chad Hansen

LaRocco not good for Idaho

Does Larry LaRocco think the voters and students of Idaho are mind-numbed idiots? Are we really to believe the students of Idaho will lose their Federal Loans and Grants if Helen Chenoweth is elected to office? I say NO!

According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), only 6 cents out of every dollar sent back to D.C. for distribution for loans and grants ever gets back to the students. In addition, larger states such as New York, Illinois, Texas, Florida and California actually get most of this money simply because of their populations. This is not fair to Idaho students. Idaho pays more into the Federal Education program than it actually receives, so forming a new state-run institution for student loans and grants would guarantee that all of the money from Idaho stays in Idaho. This would also cut down on the bureaucracy that envelopes every thing the federal government does and would ensure more than 6 cents of every dollar is spent on education in Idaho.

In addition, Larry LaRocco voted with Bill Clinton and his liberal, left-wing, tax-and-spend agenda over 82 percent of the time. This is more than the self-proclaimed liberals from Massachusetts, Joe Kennedy (79 percent) and Barney Frank (77 percent). However, Bill Clinton's approval rating in Idaho hovers at around 40 percent. How can LaRocco seriously say he is "in step" with Idaho and its citizens? After all, LaRocco cast the deciding vote on the largest tax increase in American history and helped pass the huge tax increases on Social Security recipients, courtesy of Bill and Hillary Clinton.

I ask the students and taxpayers of Idaho, "Why should we believe the lies that surround the LaRocco campaign?" After all, this is the man who not only cheated on his wife and kids, but also paid $40,000 to the female mistress involved so that she wouldn't come forth with her story, and then later lied to the citizens of Idaho when he was confronted with the scandal. What makes us think that we can trust Larry LaRocco with our votes in the House over a two year period when his own wife can't even must him to be away for a weekend?

Larry LaRocco had his chance. It's time for new leadership in Idaho and time for someone who will really be in touch with Idaho. It's time for Helen Chenoweth.

King/Darakjy for ASUI offices

This letter is to introduce Cade King and Damon Darakjy for the respected positions of ASUI President and Vice-President. Cade and I have both been active in ASUI and have the experience to represent you in the student government.

Cade and I both would like student representation on the state level; we will push for a student on the State Board of Education. Cade and I will push for a freeze on the out-of-state tuition hikes, as well as Health Insurance. We have seen the out-of-state enrollment drop. Cade and I want this to stop. Cade and I will lobby the legislature for more scholarship money—we feel we can accomplish this. We want an increase of funding for Teaching Assistants and Research Assistants. Cade and I want campus safety and work hard for the already established Safety Committee, thanks to Sen. Laura West, to get going again.

I would like to thank the TKE House for providing canned food to the Moscow Food Bank and the Special Olympics with the proceeds from their Haunted House. This kind of active participation for the good of the community is something I will heavily promote and be active in as ASUI Vice President. Cade and I will work for you, the students. A vote for Damon Darakjy and Cade King is a vote for you. Thank you. Vote Nov. 16 —Damon Darakjy

ILA against Prop. One

On behalf of the Idaho Library Association (ILA), we would like to respond to Kelly Walton’s remarks on Proposition One and libraries that appeared in the Argonaut on Nov. 1.

ILA says that the cost estimate of $26 million to review materials in libraries and separate those dealing with homosexuality into an “adult only” section is “holluscrus.” It isn’t. This figure was derived from informed estimates provided by public library directors across the state—professionals who routinely deal with library budgets. They are in the best position to know how much implementation would cost in their libraries. In some small public libraries, direction report that the reviewing cost would exceed their library’s present total annual budget.

Remember, what we’re talking about here is the cost of reviewing every page of every book, magazine, newspaper, or other type of material that the library owns and acquires, in order to sort it into collection gen-and "adult only" sections.

Walton asserts that the "average library in Rupert or Grangeville... could be duplicated for approximately $100,000." Whether this is true or not (we operation his figure, and would like to know bow he arrived at it), it’s irrelevant. We’re not talking about the cost of buying materials, we’re talking about the cost of reviewing public library materials like line. It’s also important to remember that this cost estimate does not include the reviewing costs to school, collges, and university libraries, or the cost of physical alterations to library buildings to create secure “adult only” sections. Walton is simply afraid that the Idaho taxpayer wouldn’t want for Proposition One if they knew its true cost.

ILA’s opposition to Proposition One is not based on any “fetishist elite academics” platform, but on an all-American document called the Bill of Rights, specifically the First Amendment (free speech). It enshrined and implemented. Proposition One would deny access to anyone under 18 to library materials that are written for adults and “address” homosexuality (including encyclo-decas, medical books, and standard magazines). Any age-appropriate books written for anyone under 18 on the topic of homosexuality are prohibited from even being in the “adult-only” sections of the library, so a parent could not choose to check them out to read with their child. As librarians, we believe in providing access to materials and information presenting all points of view on current and historical issues, so that people can make informed decisions. This is the very cornerstone of democracy. We cannot stand silently by as others try to erode this important citizen’s right. We believe that parents should decide for themselves what they and their children should read, not the state.

Proposition One would cost far too much for taxpayers to support, both in terms of dollars and in terms of lost freedom. Let’s use money to increase library collections and services, and not to lock them up. If you want to help our state’s libraries, VOTE NO ON PROPOsition One!

Wilson a friendly candidate

Having been active in the ASUI during my time at the University of Idaho, I have had the pleasure of working with Sean Wilson. He has consistently supported reasonable legislation from within the ASUI Senate and actively opposed such foolish measures as the ASUI’s version of the Hatch Act. Sean has worked closely with many different students to keep the ASUI from becoming a closed society of wanna-be politicians who often-forget that their paychecks come from student fees. Please cast a vote for Sean Wilson and a student-friendly stu-

Ethical Codes apply to all ASUI

I am writing in reference to the Article "ASUI Candidates Slap Mud" in the Nov. 4, issue. Let's talk about the Senate Code of Ethics that was authored by Sean Wilson last semester. It supposedly mandates ethical behavior by ASUI elected officials. What happens when the Senate Code of Ethics is breached? Are there any conse-cuences for elected senators for unethical conduct? I feel as though something must be done about the recent actions of trying to put a listen-ting device on a young lady to gate information about his opponent by ASUI Senator Sean Wilson.

As the President Pro-Tempore, Ranking Senior Senator in the Senate, and author of the Senate Code of Ethics he has talked about and produced legislation towards raising the standards for elected officials. It is obvious that he does not think those standards should apply to him. For being the highest ranking senator he shows poor and even dangerous leadership by his actions taken in his presidential campaign. Does he not think he should be held accountable? Is it right for him to brush these actions aside and pretend they did not happen? What kind of precedents will be set if he is not reprimanded? I think it is imperative that he be held accountable for his unethical actions. He is running for ASUI President and it is of the utmost importance to have somebody who does not disregard Ethical Codes... nor feel he can get away with anything just because of his position. It is time for the Senate to raise itself above politics and demand answers from Sean Wilson. It is time for the Senate to do what is right, which is not to let these actions slide by without a reprimand. We should not let actions as this be acceptable, especially from someone who is trying to become ASUI President.

UI engineering "world-class"

UI engineering is "world-class" if benefiting students of the state of Idaho is the true goal of higher education, the State Board of Education is correct in not accepting Micron Technology's bribe.

This statement is in direct response to the opinion column written by Chris Miller, Chris Miller and Mr. Appleton of Micron seem to feel the only way to have a "world-class" program is to relinquish control to the highest bidder. I tend to disagree. I feel the definition of "world-class" is somewhat subjective anyway. Is "world-class" based on test scores? If so, one should review the scores of the University of Idaho's graduates on the funda-mentals of engineering exams. Our graduates score rank in the upper ten percent. Is it based on job placement? If so, one should review our alumni, as many are leaders of major corporations. I personally know of at least a half-dozen engineers already employed by Micron Technology, and I do not think any of them feel less than "world-class." I have had the opportunity to work with a number of graduates of UI, including the state president of the Idaho Society of Professional Engineers. Each of these people, in my opinion, have been "world-class." I have also seen the respect the resumes of our graduates. In fact, it was stated by one engineer that "UI graduates are able to compete with a graduate from any school around." Sounds like "world-class" to me.

Mr. Miller also implied that having an engineering school in Boise would encourage local kids to live at home with mom and dad and attend a local school. Come on, not all of us engineers are assal-reten-tive nerds with an ODIOUS complex. Part of growing up and being able to handle the pressures of being a professional of any kind involves learning to cope with independence. When I graduated from high school, I couldn't wait to leave the nest. I learned as much about life in a few short months on my own as I could have learned in any classroom. I do agree to the fact that there is a need for continuing education for existing engineers and technicians. This would explain why I quit my job as a mechanical designer, sold my house and moved from Pocatello to Moscow. Sure there have been hardships, but an education from UI is worth almost any hardship.

Also, Mr. Miller, have you been over to the engineering side of campus? Your argument that Micron is the only entity willing to spend money on students doesn't fly. A new multi-million dollar mines building and a multi-million dollar mechanical engineering building are both under construction right now. Micron's million would be a good start for an engineering program. Boise State in 1987 is the October 1994 issue of Engineering Times, Lynn Russell, dean of engineering at University of Alabama, states, "... as far as industry promising to flood the state hasn't happened in Huntsville, what typically happens is that industry feels that it's something they need to pretend to provide-like sort of like roads, sewer service or any other infrastructure. Even though they may put a little money in to help get it started, they don't intend to really sustain it." The University of Alabama in Huntsville got its start 25 years ago with help from industry.

In the same article David Wough, chairman of the National Society of Professional Engineers in Education and professor at University of South Carolina suggests that schools should focus on spreading their resources rather than adding entirely new programs and more graduates. Sound famillar?

‘Federation’ is fun, uplifting

The hard fans of the original Star Trek and New Generation treks finally have a novel both can enjoy in Judith and Garfield Reeves-Stevens’ Star Trek: Federation. The Reeves-Stevens manage to previously published plot lines involving the Guardian of Forever, Sarek, and Zefram Cochrane and the Company. They even pull in the immortal PItt, the Borg, the Ferengi, Romulans, Klingons and a modicum of theoretical physics.

They do all that without seeming to reach too hard. There are a few hobbles of character, but none that jump out with a bright, glaring light. Kirk is in energy tractate harassed by a passion-drive spirit in Detroit beyond his full Vulcan counterpart points and seems as unable to ever to resist needing McCoy who protests as always while doing whatever medical miracle is required. Picard presents his usual "sanctified aura of correctness" which cracks just enough here to dispel the charge of total investigative; a slight circumventing of regulations and his unconventional choice of maneuver in a Romulan space battle gives him a new depth. West anticipates a ridiculously elaborate trap because of his Klingon suspiciousness and is proven correct in doing so. Even Wesley is busy.

The story hinges on the importance of the warp effect, which allows intersstellar travel, in preserving humanity and creating the underlying principles of the Federation.

Like a key maneuver which occurs within the event horizon of a trinity black hole at Federation’s best. The usual suspicion, the three story lines converge, circle and return to their own references. This isn’t the best book ever written. It’s not even great literature. But it can provide a few fans, splitting hours of reading.

It’s alive: ‘Frankenstein’ returns

After arriving in the nick of time at the University 4, I was able to see the movie Frankenstein.

The movie began with a ship in the high seas making its way to the south. It’s caught in a storm and is lodged in ice the next day. It is this scene that one of the main characters, Victor Frankenstein, is introduced.

The movie is told from Victor Frankenstein’s point of view. Kenneth Branagh does a wonderful job with the scenery in the movie. Throughout there are times where it looks like the movie was filmed on a set, yet most of the movie was filmed out in the real world.

Robert DeNiro, Frankenstein, portrays a character who is angry at his father’s abrupt departure from his life and is at the same time kind to others who don’t reject him for his looks.

DeNiro does a wonderful job portraying what “the monster” is really like in Mary Shelley’s classic novel. In the movie “the monster” can speak, read and understand. Branagh is careful to follow the actual book, something rare in Hollywood.

The special effects in the movie are spectacular—along with the makeup applied to DeNiro in order to make him look like “the monster.” The make-up people also make DeNiro look larger than life. In the movie he stands around eight feet in height.

Another awe-inspiring special effect is in a scene towards the end of the movie in which one of the characters is running down the hallway on fire, igniting the walls...

Frankenstein isn’t really a horror flick by the definition, it is rather the story of a person who had to fulfill his drive to make death something of the past. It is a story of loyalty and a passion for life. It portrays what is happening in society—for example, the exercise of war rather than re-animation through science. It is interesting that the story was written so long ago but can still be applied to modern science.

This movie deserves a A in my gradebook for quality and story line. Not only does it follow the book but it also looks real. The acting is superb by all members of the cast. Frankenstein can be viewed at the University 4.

Don’t cry for Diego, Argentina

Diego Maradona is the biggest star in the most popular sport on earth—soccer. In a poll published years ago, he was declared the most popular man in the planet coming after only Mickey Mouse, who was at the top of the list. Sportsmen like Michael Jordan, Emmitt Smith or Wayne Gretzky are practically unknown if we compare them with Maradona in a global perspective.

In the last World Cup, Maradona was kicked out of the Argentine team for a reckless conduct. He took some vitamins that were not authorized by the FIFA, the organiza- tion that controls soccer all around the world.

The man who used to kick Maradona away took the chance for Argentina to win its third World Cup. The team without its leader looked confused on the field, and rapidly lost against a team of less-er quality. Maradona showed in every step of his career that he Fast sequences roll past the viewers in this visual movie by Francis Ford Coppola, with scenes portraying roller coasters to swinging effects. The producer, Godfrey Reggio, places these scenes together, and the photographer, Ron Fricke, did the footage which includes still-water scenes to colliding giant waves splashing.

The Koyaanisquasti film opens with a rock wall scene on which is painted six block eolithic figures and another larger white figure standing with black figures in the length of its body. The producer’s choice in picking the Hopi Indian word was to explain the theme in the movie that means “crazy life,” or “out-of-balancing,” and it depics another theme that describes technological advancement in quick sequences.

Later the audience vision is transmited to a floating scene of flakes falling more like ice flakes in a downward direction with a tower in the background, then the land becomes racheted with small gullies. These landscapes are scattered until there are smoking black rocks, then into shadowy, watery, designs reflecting on the moving ground.

The cloud scenes roll like waves coming rapid eye movements, and switches to cars moving on the freeways. The film proceeds with pictures of waves, clouds, and cities, and if viewers do not place their eyes in a fixed position, a feeling of motion sickness overwhelmns them.

More rapid eye movement happens in the factory scenes with rolling belt lines loaded with waisters, boloney, jeans, and computer ships that are being assembled on bases. The audience is bomobted with these additional images that have mesmerization effects.

A big plate is saturated in heat waves and moves around and across the screen with the camera man moving his camera around the plane, as it is in a big whale in the city, and eventually the plane moves through the middle of the city; the imagination grows.

Einstein’s Formula is written on a flot top of a ship towards the end of the film, finally flashing back to the military grounds with thousands of tanks lined up. All of a sudden an explosion erupts in the screen with a black mushroom-effect bellowing off the desert floor. The screen takes the viewers back to the city with the immensely high mirrored buildings. The camera angle is projected up so the viewer is seeing photographs of a gigantic building proceeding to its top.

Immediately the movie shows people going through airports by the thousands on elevators that are stairedwell. The scene jumps to Nevada with a billboard saying, “Grand Illusion” with scenes of different people from various ethnic backgrounds, to the ending segment of a scene sequenced with white women.

This movie is for viewers seeking occasion, creativity and who need an appreciation for life. It will offer an outlet to end all boredom or frustrations for life flitting out, since people do drive their goals towards advancement. The film flags a warning to the audience of narcissism of the problems of the future as a result the reviewer found the movie to out of-balance for approval.

The remainder of the International Festival of Films are Nov. 9, My Life as a Dog; and Nov. 16, Tania. Both films are at 7 p.m. in the Bohon Theater in the Student Union, and tickets are $2 general admission, and $1 under graduates.

CRANES 'LOVED' STRIKINGLY BEAUTIFUL..."

With a soft childlike voice and ethereal, harrowing music, Cranes is another great album to the world of music. Loved is full of music that echoes with a fine quality of heaven. All of the music is accompanied with Alison’s childlike lyrics. The first song "Shining Road" begins with soft guitar riffs and a pounding of the drums. It contains the voice of Shaw-- sounding like she is in a large chamber. Her voice transmits the beauty of guitar riffs, filling your mind with lovely whirling lyrics. Yet, the whininess in a childlike voice is the beauty of Shaw’s voice. Her voice adds a special quality to the album which takes Cranes to a step higher than they would be.

"Prist Blue Sky"..."...sings with guitars echoing and a drum just playing the same tune over and over. "Prist Blue Sky" is filled with light guitar riffs which are occasionally mingled with heavy guitar..."

The most original and oldest sounding song in my opinion of the album is the fourth track which is "I Like." I’m not sure how it starts, to tell you the truth, but it sounds like it’s being played on a keyboard. It’s just a little tune which ends and signals the opening of guitar playing by heavy metal and by a whiney bass. Finally Shaw comes in with vocals that sound more like she is talking, “something to hold / something to hold onto / something / someone to love / someone to need / on the busy path...”

As soon as you hear this album you’ll fall in love with Shaw’s voice and the pure innocence of the music itself. Cranes have just completed the soundtrack to a short British film Scarborough Abbey!"

Four from Seattle, born and bred on the music of punk, 7 Year Bitch has released a new album called Viva Zepa. This album is dedicated to Matt Zepa, a friend and the number of 7 Year Bitch, who was killed after a concert. On a lighter note, Viva Zepa is a very nice album to listen to. The trio girls that are Seattle’s favorite female punk band are back in a powerful punkish sound. Following their first release, Sick...Viva Zepa is a more developed punk sound. The first song on the album, "The Scratch," starts out with the guitar riffs playing a chant over and over again while the bass building in rhythm with the main tune of the song. Finally in comes the vocalist speaking her lyrics. Other things such as "MC" and "Dedication" fit Easy, pure punk with the vocalist somberly talking and singing at points. "Cut Me Out," starts out soft with drums and then goes into a hard guitar riff, yet still maintaining the slow beat. The song "Kiss My Ass. Goodbye," starts out with fast guitar which seems to be a trademark of 7 Year Bitch.

7 Year Bitch’s Viva Zepa is fitted with punk that follows in the footsteps of another female punk band, L7. In 7 Year Bitch’s lyrics they speak of rape, death, and other problems in the world. The songs of 7 Year Bitch are not just screaming nonsensical lyrics. Some of the album is sung with a soft voice, yet through the album you have the limitless beat and guitar mixing becoming a combination of pure punk, yet softer than some punk..."

An album which features three male vocalists which are currently from local Northwest bands and are made a brothers/sister trio from Portland.

This album is dedicated to Matt Zepa, a friend and the number of 7 Year Bitch, who was killed after a concert. On a lighter note, Viva Zepa is a very nice album to listen to. The trio girls that are Seattle’s favorite female punk band are back in a powerful punkish sound. Following their first release, Sick...Viva Zepa is a more developed punk sound. The first song on the album, "The Scratch," starts out with the guitar riffs playing a chant over and over again while the bass building in rhythm with the main tune of the song. Finally in comes the vocalist speaking her lyrics. Other things such as "MC" and "Dedication" fit Easy, pure punk with the vocalist somberly talking and singing at points. "Cut Me Out," starts out soft with drums and then goes into a hard guitar riff, yet still maintaining the slow beat. The song "Kiss My Ass. Goodbye," starts out with fast guitar which seems to be a trademark of 7 Year Bitch.

7 Year Bitch’s Viva Zepa is fitted with punk that follows in the footsteps of another female punk band, L7. In 7 Year Bitch’s lyrics they speak of rape, death, and other problems in the world. The songs of 7 Year Bitch are not just screaming nonsensical lyrics. Some of the album is sung with a soft voice, yet through the album you have the limitless beat and guitar mixing becoming a combination of pure punk, yet softer than some punk..."

Last year I considered leaving the legislature to move directly to helping community prevention programs. I wondered who would get my republican seat on the budget committee. The speaker was very cooperative. No one north of Boise had the seniority to take my seat. Can you imagine the farmers, loggers, schools, Universities of this area with no republican from North Idaho on the budget committee?

However, those big three hitters would be nothing without the setting abilities of Hyland.

She recorded 46 assists in Saturday’s straight-set victory

tinued to be a key player during this 3-0 sweep. Sherriden May doesn’t have a pound as running back.

It was Sherriden May’s day in the Kibbie Dome as Allen, only 20 points behind on the first half, may have won the 17-second half. May started those three sets by running the ball 14 times. He finished with 169 yards
on 20 carries.

The University of Idaho football team made history Saturday. But they’re not being awarded any cool trophies or shiny certificates for their accomplishment.

For the first time in the Kibbie Dome’s 20-year history, the halftime score stood at 0-0. Yikes.

However, Sherriden May kept out of his coffin in the second half and the Vandal defense was nearly flawless as they defeated the No. 8
Northern Iowa Panthers in a creginal 21-12 win before 10,350 fans.

“Our football team can legitijustly say we’ve played with the best of I-AA,” Panther head coach Terry Allen said.

May, who gained only 27 yards
on the ground in the first half,
exploded for 109 third quarter
yards highlighted by an electrifying 70-yard run that sparked the Vandals to victory.

On first downs, May took the handoff, ran to the outside eluding
the Panthers’ blitzing defense, and outspun the three UNI defensive backs to give Idaho a 14-6 lead.

It was May’s longest touchdown run of his illustrious career and he tied the Division I-AA career record for touchdowns, scoring his 60th. Before the score, he had had four games without a touchdown and had failed to eclipse
the 100-yard mark.

May rushed for 168 yards on 20
carries.

The Vandals (8-1 overall, 4-1 Big Sky) put the game away in the fourth quarter with an impressive drive that featured May and fellow running back Joel Thomas.
The duo combined for three first downs on three straight running plays that put Idaho on the Panther 10-yard line.

On third downs from the 2-yard line, quarterback Brian Brennan faked a handoff to May and fired a short strike to tight end Andy Gilley for the touchdown, making it 21-6. The score capped off an eight-play, 80-yard drive.

“Number 20 (Thomas). I don’t even know his name,” said UNI linebacker Andre Allen. “He surprised me a lot. He’s quick, he’s strong, his center of gravity is pretty low.”

Thomas finished with 65 yards
on just seven attempts.

Allen, nonetheless, showed his own speed and quickness in the first half as he sacked Brennan three times. On two of his sacks, Allen was unblocked. In the second half, though, Allen was contained, failing to sack Brennan.

Allen’s three sacks were all that was allowed by Idaho’s offensive line.

Brennan said the Panther defense took a lot of the deep routes away from UNI’s offensive arsenal. Brennan completed 19 of 32 passes for 205 yards.

Idaho was just the opposite defense as Panther quarterback

nation in kills per game average with a 5.2 clip.
The Vandals (24-2, 11-2) cruised to the first game victory by reeling up 12 unanswered points to start the game. The Wildcats never real-tly threatened the Vandals, hitting just .294 in the contest and bringing up just 49 kills compared to U of I’s 56. Weber State was also out-blocked by the 21st-ranked Vandals 9-6.

Mindy Rice chipped in 15 kills and only two errors for a .433 hitting performance. Rice, who is ninth in the nation in kill average with 3.4 per game, is just 14 kills away from 1,000 in her career.

Middle blocker Brittany Van Haverbeke, who had 12 kills against Weber State, is just 19 kills away from the mark.
The dynamic duo is looking to become just the sixth and seventh players to reach the plateau. Van Haverbeke will become the second Vandal in history to record 1,000
kills, 800 digs, and 500 blocks.
Two-time Big Sky MVP Nacey
Wicks was the first. Both players are likely to break the four figure mark this weekend.

The Vandals hammered 57 kills Saturday and matched the solid offensive numbers with unguarding defense as well, allowing the Wildcats just 40 kills and no player
compiled more than Anette Hill’s 11.

Lyne Hyland contributed 46
assists for the Vandals and continued to lead the nation in that category with a 14.47 per game average.
She was named the Big Sky volleyball player of the week following stellar performances against NAU and Weber State.

Tonight, the Vandals face the Gonzaga Bulldogs in Spokane.
Game time is 7 p.m. MST.
