Teacher evaluations available to students

Michelle Kalbeter

In the early 1970s, the University of Idaho adopted a system to evaluate teaching to provide students with the chance to give their instructors a message on their performance or, in some cases, a lack thereof. The evaluation process is to respond to five questions about the instructor’s performance over the semester and cover such topics as whether or not the course was organized effectively. Space is provided at the bottom of the page for comments on how to improve the course.

Tom Bitterwolf, director of Teaching Enhancement, encourages students to take the evaluations seriously because the compiled results are seen by more than just the professor.

After the evaluations leave the hands of the students, they go directly to Academic Affairs where they undergo a cleaning process so they can be scanned. Once they are scanned, the results are compiled and printed on a tabular form. These results can be viewed by students at the Academic Affairs Office in the Administration Building Room 304.

At this point the actual forms and summaries go to the dean of the college, where the results are reviewed and then forwarded to the department chair. The department chair then reads every single form and meets with each faculty member to discuss the evaluation. The forms are then given to the faculty member to read and respond to.

Tom Bitterwolf says the comment section is the most revealing and therefore it is extremely valuable. "Thoughtful comments are really the place where the student has an opportunity to make a meaningful statement about the class," Bitterwolf said. "If there is a really serious problem about the class, that's the place to talk about it."

There are further implications involving the evaluations. When the department chair fills out the end-of-semester evaluations, these comments become part of the assessment process. A ranking is then given to the faculty members based on a number of factors including the evaluations. This score determines how much of a pay raise instructors get.

"There is a real economic incentive to do well in their classes," Bitterwolf said. "The extremely positive comments can help, whereas the negative comments can hurt."

The student evaluations also figure prominently in the process for professors seeking tenure. The results of the evaluations come into play again when professors are evaluated for promotion.

The bottom line is, "Student evaluations are read, they are important, and they are read very seriously," Bitterwolf said.

Earth Resources Building nearing completion

Vernon Spencer, Jr.

Construction on the new $12 million Earth Resources Building next to Janssen Engineering Building is nearing completion. Butch Follerton, director of construction management, said construction is on schedule and should be completed by Jan. 31.

The 70,000 square foot building—twice the size of the current Mines building—will be named McClure Hall in honor of former Senator Jack McClure. Dr. Robert Bartlett, head of Mines and Earth Resources, said McClure has been instrumental in natural resource development.

The McClure Hall project is receiving about $8.8 million in federal funds for a Strategic Resources and Environment Laboratory. It will be used to research materials important to our economy or defense and not competitively produced in the United States. The laboratory will be used to study methods of conserving, recycling and substitution of natural resources.

In addition to the Strategic Resources Lab facility will also house the Departments of Metallurgical and Mining Engineering and Geography. Most of the Department of Geology as well as the dean’s offices will remain in the Old Mines building.

The building will contain mostly research and teaching labs along with faculty and graduate student offices and four conference/auditorium rooms. Also included will be a 75-seat or more lecture hall for university use, said Bob Haustala, associate dean of Mines and Earth Resources. He said the construction is apparently coming in on budget.

Haustala said the design of the building was meant to conform to the motto "Where tradition meets the future."

He said the brick structure with a green used roof helps the building fit in with the other buildings on campus. Some of the siding on the east and south sides of the building will be a copper-colored anodized aluminum to add a futuristic touch.

Bartlett said the new building will free up space for the rest of the university. Many Mines and Earth Resources offices now are located in other buildings, and as they are relocated into McClure Hall, it will give other colleges more room.

Elections to be held again tomorrow

D u to a mix-up in ballots, the student Senate election for ASU candidates was held Nov. 30.

Polls will be set up at the Wallace Complex, UCC, Kappa Delta, Phi Gamma Delta, Administration Building, library, the Satellite Student Union and the Student Union.

The mix-up occurred when voters were not properly informed on how to fill out the ballot. Approximately 170 ballots were not filled out properly and were thrown in a call for another election.

In the Argonaut story covering the election, it was reported that candidates would not be allowed to campaign before the Nov. 30 election day. The Student Issues Board changed that decision and is allowing the candidates to campaign.
Gingrich vision to get airing in Congress

Robert Shogan
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—"I've always told all of you I was not nearly as radical as some of my friends," Rep. Newt Gingrich said in a post-election speech in which he backed away from a colleague's proposal to scrap the federal income tax in favor of a national sales tax.

But the very next day, the Georgia Republican who is in line to become Speaker of the House took a strikingly different tack. He talked nonchalantly on a television program about slashing a half-trillion dollars from federal spending; dismantling the Americans With Disabilities Act, an instrument of the Bush administration; and removing low-income single mothers from the welfare rolls, leaving them dependent on the beneficence of private charity.

In the aftermath of the Republican takeover of Congress, Gingrich has emerged as the most certain to drive public-policy debates during the next Congress and perhaps the 1996 presidential campaign and beyond.

Those who know him best attribute Gingrich's world view in large part to his life as the stepson of an Army officer in the rural South and as an academic in a small Southern college that gave him the freedom to roam intellectually.

"An opportunity society requires a dynamic, expanding vision of freedom and the future," he wrote in "Wisdom of Opportunity," the book he published in 1984. "If people... see a vision powerful enough, they will commit themselves to a thousand-mile march. Without that vision, they are unlikely to move at all."

The most conspicuous evidence of that vision during the midterm election campaign was the GOP's "contract with America."

But this compendium of ideas—such as a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution, congressional term limits and tax cuts—represents only the tip of Gingrich's ideology.

Gingrich is deified by an abundance of "high-technology options" and strategies that can help rid American society of the decadence inflicted upon it by Democratic liberalism. He is particularly engaged by futurist writer Alvin Toffler's concept of "militeracy," combining the traditional three R's of learning with the mass media and computer technology. Once Americans have mastered trilitery, Gingrich claims, "there will be a tremendous increase not only in America's productivity but also in each individual's creativity as people learn to reinscribe themselves in order to find... Islamic militant attacks on the increase against intellectuals

Klin Murphy
Los Angeles Times

CAIRO, Egypt—Rifat Said always used to be one of Cairo's best-loved men-about-town. As head of Egypt's leftist Tagammu Party, he could always be counted on to speak out on behalf of Egyptians' long-abused ranks of the disinterested and to ridicule the excesses of Mubarak's regime.

But then Said started getting anonymous messages in the mail, like the one he received only a few weeks ago:

"You kill yourself, you useless. But I will not shoot you. You'll eat with my knife, and I'll throw your flesh to the dogs to eat, so you won't contaminate me any more."

Said's life changed dramatically after such missives from Islamic militants.

Now he travels nowhere without at least six bodyguards. His daughter dodged out of his car at a traffic light the last time she rode with him, overwhelmed by the gun barrels bristling out the back window.

When Said lifted up his jacket, there's a gun in a holster under-neath it.

"He doesn't go to parties anymore. He has nearly eliminated his lecture schedule at the American University of Cairo.

"Like an unusually growing number of intellectuals and artists threatened by Islamic extremists, Said is on the run, but he's not hiding."

"When they assassinated Farag Foda (a prominent Egyptian secularist gunned down after engaging in heated public debates with fundamentalist leaders), many people stopped writing. I was the only one who continued attacking them," Said said.

While militant threats against writers, singers, actors and intellectuals have been a way of life in the Islamic world since the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's death decree against British author Salman Rushdie, the last few months have seen a dramatic increase, reflecting the growing clash between Arabs committed to Islamizing society and those equally bent on maintaining free and open public discourse.

"The knife attack on the Nobel Prize-winning novelist Naguib Mahfouz pointed up many of the debates that increasingly are polarizing Muslims at a time of political trauma in the Middle East."

"The target of the assassins was the person of Mahfouz: but rather the image of Egypt in the international community," commented Cairo's leading daily newspaper, Al Ahram. "His international standing and persons are symbolic of the secular orientation of the Egyptian and Arab intelligentsia."

On the other side, Cairo cleric Sheikh Mohammed Ghazali, while deploiring the violence against Mahfouz, lashed out at the decision to publish for the first time this month—a book that has been banned and that already contained the assassins' own request—the author's "Children of al-Ghali," a 1959 allegorical novel about the prophets banned by Islamic decree for two decades in Egypt.

The book was published in full in a special edition of the Tagammu Party's Al-Ahram newspaper that sold like wildfire shortly after the attack on the 83-year-old writer.

Al Ahram, the voice of the Egyptian government, waived the constitutional prohibition that it has held dormant for nearly 20 years and announced its own intentions to serialize the book.

"We question ourselves about people who hate God dearly."  SEE ISLAM PAGE 3 their own paths to wisdom and knowledge.

One favored by Gingrich is to "fire the House to all of its official documents electronically, making them generally available by computer, and he contends, a better-informed and more active citizenry.

By freeing Americans from the yoke of big government and high taxes, Gingrich argues, we unleash the energies of individual enterprise and ambition. He contends that breaking the back of the welfare bureaucracy would benefit not only middle-class taxpayers but the poor.

Gingrich contends that the current federal approach to welfare is based on what he calls redistribution policies and programs. He contends that if we simply redistribute income, we will not solve the poverty problem.

"He's talking about a series of problems with which national government has never been directly involved and about which the national government finds it very hard to do anything constructive," said North Carolina University historian William Leuchtenberg.

On the economic front, Republican strategist Kevin Phillips contends that the balanced-budget amendment, being pushed by Gingrich, is "not going to solve any problems with which national government has never been directly involved and about which the national government finds it very hard to do anything constructive," said North Carolina University historian William Leuchtenberg.

"It's going to sound good when you start out with it," Phillips said. But he predicted that support would "drop sharply as soon as people find out it's going to cut into their Social Security or benefits or raise their taxes."
IWA to meet Dec. 3

Mary Blanton is hosting the Dec. 3 meeting of the International Women's Association at her home at 616 East C Street in Moscow. The meeting will begin at 2 p.m. The meeting will offer the chance for women to share holiday traditions. Rides are available and will begin leaving the Student Union at 1:50 p.m. The meeting is open to both international women students and wives and women in the community. For more information, call 885-7841.

Power of music to be discussed

Daniel Bukvich, a member of the faculty in the Lionel Hampton School of Music, will present a speech entitled "Murder, Suicide, or Worse: The Power of Music" Dec. 14 at 12:30 p.m. in the Student Union Silver and Gold Room. The public is welcome.

People attending are encouraged to bring a sack lunch. For more information, call Suzanne Loker at 885-6546 or Pam Farmer at 885-6009.

NSEP offers study funding

The National Security Education Program is offering full funding for study and research in Latin America, Africa, Asia and the former Soviet Union. Application deadline is Dec. 1. Call 885-8984 for more information.

$500 awards available

The Martin Institute for Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution is offering a limited number of $500 awards to regularly enrolled graduate students whose theses or dissertation research is on topics related to world peace or conflict resolution. Deadline is Dec. 1. Call 885-6527 for more information.

Colloquium to be held today

Dr. Larry Stauffer will give a lecture today at 8:30 p.m. in Room 26 of the Janssen Engineering Building.

The lecture is entitled "Management and Organization of Specifications in Engineering: A new paradigm for concurrent engineering during product definition."

GSA to hold spot bid sale

The General Services Administration will hold a spot bid sale of approximately 30 vehicles Dec. 8 beginning at 10 a.m. Those interested can inspect the vehicles Dec. 5 and 6 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Dec. 7 from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Dec. 8 from 8 to 10 a.m. Bidders may submit bids during the inspection period or from 8 to 9 a.m. on the day of the sale. For more information, call 509-353-2544.

V-ball league organizing

The organizational meeting for the Co-Rec volleyball league will be held Dec. 7 at 6 p.m. in the Eggen Youth Center at 1515 East D Street. A team manager or representative should attend this meeting. Registration is by team only on Jan. 9. The fee is $150 per team. For more information call 883-7085.

Fires of 1994 topic of lecture

Mary Bowman of the U.S. Forest Service will talk about the role of information dissemination during the forest fires of 1994. The lecture will take place in the College of Forestry Room 10 Nov. 29 at 7 p.m.
Board to hear report on state engineering needs

The engineering-needs task force appointed by the State Board of Education will give its first report at a meeting to be held over an interactive video link. The video link will join meetings taking place in Moscow, Pocatello and Boise. Participants will be able to talk in real-time conversations over television monitors.

The meeting will be held from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., Mountain Standard Time, Dec. 1. Those interested in attending should go to the KUID-TV studio on campus.

The task force was appointed to examine statewide needs for engineering and technical education. The task force is comprised mostly of industry representatives, and has been asked to assess the need for expanding engineering programs in higher education to meet the increasing demand from Idaho businesses.

Idaho's economy was recently ranked number one in the nation by U.S. News and World Report. Much of the credit is due to the increasing number of technological businesses moving to Idaho—especially to the Boise area.

Assault suspect arrested

The Moscow Police have arrested a suspect in an attack which occurred near the Alumni Residence Center Nov. 4.

Curt Steiner was arrested and charged with battery. Steiner, 25, is a resident of Moscow. Steiner admitted the attack to police after turning himself in two weeks ago. The victim, Chong Cho, a University of Idaho graduate student, was attacked while walking home. He suffered a broken leg and was hospitalized for several days.

Police say they have no reason to believe that the attack was a hate crime or racially motivated.

Also charged in the attack is Robert DeMontigny, 25, of Moscow. DeMontigny has been charged with aiding a battery. DeMontigny has been identified as the driver of the vehicle the suspect of the attack fled the scene in.

GSA will not hold reelection Wednesday

Because of the many invalid ballots cast in the recent election for officers of the Graduate Students Association, the Human Resources Committee of the GSA, which is charged with the responsibility of certifying the election, has decided not to do so.

The Human Resources Committee has decided instead to ask the GSA President to call an emergency session of the Graduate Student Council, at which the delegates will be asked to call and schedule a new election, or certify as elected the candidates for president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, respectively Bill Owens, Randy Paulin, Mohamed Kansoumbah and Mike Willie.

Since the GSA will send a few days to count and discuss the matter, the GSA will not hold a return of its election count meeting with one scheduled for the ASUI on Nov. 20.

An emergency GSC meeting will be held Dec. 5 to determine the next course of action.

A/V equipment replaced over break

Justin Bellier

Supporting Brief

Many students may have noticed after returning from Thanksgiving break that some of their classrooms have new televisions and VCRs.

Over the break, Classroom Audio/Visual Services at the Media Center were busy adding new equipment to all general purpose classrooms. Kirk Kelly, manager of Classroom A/V Services, has been working over the last four years to add such equipment to the classroom on a VCR basis so that each classroom equipped with VCRs and 27-inch televisions for use by the faculty, said Kelly.

The Classroom A/V Services will be replacing many outdated projectors with newer, brighter models, Kelly said. Color transparencies, now commonly used by many faculty members, require a brighter light source in order to be seen clearly, according to Kelly.

For this and future a/v equipment introductions comes from the Provost Office. Thanksgiving break, Kelly and Classroom A/V Services had managed to equip 25 classrooms with new televisions and VCRs.

Classroom A/V Services offers a/v equipment to teachers and students without charge as long as it is used for classroom presentation purposes.

Equipment may be rented for non-university use at standard commercial rates.

Professors fear hard times ahead

Republican takeover of Congress seen as ominous

The American Association of University Professors is expressing its worry about the future of higher education in the United States after the results of the national elections became clear Nov. 9.

AUP President James E. Peddy is concerned that the new Republican-controlled congress scheduled to open January will not continue to provide as much federal funds for higher education as it has in the past.

According to the AUP, the newly elected Republican Congress may cut off future federal aid for public universities. The two most common loans, the Federal Stafford Loan and the Perkins Loan, defer interest until the student leaves either finished school or have not attended school for a specified time period.

The AUP believes this measure, if enacted, could add an average of $3,685 dollars to the total bill students have to pay for four years of college. Currently, students owe an average of $17,125 in loans when they finish school. The extra interest would increase this amount by 20 percent. Students wishing to pursue post-graduate studies could count on adding an additional $12,995 to their education bill.

The professor association also contests the Republican contract recommending the elimination of minimum work requirements currently used to help the most financially needy students while supporting the reduction of funding for international educational exchanges.

Assuming the AUP's concerns are valid, what strategies might students adopt to cope with the anticipated changes in funding for higher education?

With the possibility of reduced federal aid and the introduction of new student loan policies, students might consider exploring alternative avenues for financial support. This could include seeking scholarships, grants, and other forms of institutional aid. Additionally, students may need to take on part-time jobs to help offset the costs of education. It's also possible they might reconsider their academic plans or consider attending community colleges or technical schools instead. These steps would require careful planning and proactive decision-making to ensure a smooth transition through their educational pursuits.
Students get one more shot at ASUI

With all the hoopla surrounding out-going ASUI President John Marble and the ongoing impeachment proceedings, it’s easy to forget that the election re-run of UI is about to face. However, it’s going to happen regardless.

Due to the incorrect marking of 170 ballots two weeks ago (a whopping 13.5% of all votes cast), the ASUI elections were declared invalid and a second attempt arranged. For those of you who are still deriving from the onslaught of turkey and Mom’s homemade apple pie, the new elections have been scheduled for Nov. 30. The chance arises not just to make a change in the makeup of the student government, but to make up for the last time.

Despite the high visibility of the candidates and endless exhortations by nearly every branch of student media to vote (or perhaps because of it), the student voter turnout was extremely low. Out of nearly 11,000 students attending this institution, a grand total of 1,257 ballots were cast.

(Before getting out your calculators, it works out to approximately 11% of the student population, give or take 4%).

Traditionally, voter turnout on campus are low, and admittedly, this year’s turnout was definitely not the worst ever seen. But it is, however, apathy has no excuse. A common complaint of students is that they disapprove of the actions of the bureaucracy, that they feel powerless to affect the course of events in the university. Yet, how can such complaints be taken seriously when 69% of UI students fail to take the opportunity to shuffle the lineup?

One of the most common excuses for not voting, whether in campus, state or federal elections, is the erroneous feeling that one person’s vote does no good in the grand scheme of things. Wrong! Forgetting your vote is as much a crime as the one you have already committed. Choice “b” has a clear and necessary relationship between males and females, and moreover, when have males, females don’t have braun, and when females have braun males don’t have braun—it’s tricky, but a simple concept, real. Choice “d” is the right answer. Brain implicitly means thought, and brain means action.

Reading comprehension: Ex. Under slimy rocks, small worms live in a semi-aquatic environment. After a while, they often consider living and eating at the place they were hatched. This habit is simply a survival mechanism, which usually is somewhere where an abundant food supply is available most of the year, and where there are lots of space places that allow for freedom of movement when they wish to slither to another place where the above is more readily available.

Stupidity runs rampant at UI as students flunk ballot test

I am continuous and and the level of stupidly I discover around me on a daily basis. This is not unique; it can be found in some unlikely places and in some unlikely forms.

One of the first things that comes to mind is that as a group, college students are dumber than I remember. This is proven by UI students. They don’t seem to have a clue, or a grad student, or even a high school student to know by mark A or B on the ballot when voting in the ASUI and GSA elections.

The students have worked their tails off during this campaign (and also spent a large wad of cash) all to have the student body fail miserably. So, they were forced to spend Thanksgiving in a cold, wet, miserable "I can’t believe they forgot for A or B" over and over and over.

Jennifer Swift

Who can enjoy a good turkey under these circumstances? All this, because 15% of those who voted couldn’t take the time to follow directions. Duh!!!

Shining example of stupidity number two. The ASUI’s attempt to impeach their president. I can see why they want to do it—she’s not living up to the job requirements—but why now? Isn’t an election enough to keep them busy?

Apprently John has been pulling these escape from responsibility maneuvers all this summer, but now, the ASUI does anything it wants under the guise of an election. In October—November— they have to wait until just before this end of November.

Boy, I am glad our student
Truth hard to distinguish

Ken Queller made a few good points in his letter to the editor: Nov. 4. "All have sinned..." But I think Queller's argument that heteronorms commit the greatest number of sexual crimes against children is misleading. Considering the smaller percentage of homonormals, heteronorms commit most of all crimes anyway, assuming the contamination of moral humanity is fairly consistent throughout. Forget homo-, hetero-, bi-, sexual, etc. Why can't we just be humans, males and females? I'm just asking sick and tired of stepping on toes and stepping on eggshells. We're all humans, and we have a field of problems.

Theologically, many individuals hold all wrong as equally wrong, but, practically, we humans can't really grasp any theology. From our point of view we rank things. Considering this, our sexuality is only of secondary importance. Our minds, souls, and spirits are the main concern. Deal with the intangi-bles and the corporals will follow.

I agree with Queller in that God's grace applies to everyone. No one should ever try to categorize that. Queller is correct that the Apostle Paul never intended that we try to become other than what we are. Christian theology is clear that only God can truly change a person's nature—from death unto life. But a very definite point is missed: "Deeply yourself, pick up your cross, and follow me." Basic to Christianity is the premise that there are many things about our nature that do need changing.

However, Christians have no basis for expecting non-Christians to live and believe this way. Protection of personal rights is a very sticky issue. Personal rights usually involve more than the individual. This is the great difficulty. When does a personal right contradict itself?

It seems to us that we are getting commo- nsense in "just being who we are." Today, everyone looks at the same institutions to prove the validity of their personal state of existence. Everyone courses to different and often contradictory conclusions from the same starting information.

I see us moving toward an existen-tial case of "what is, is right." It would be comforting to know that we saw everything correctly. But with this hope, many fall into mak-ing their own religion.

"The Christian who does not begin in comfort; it begins in dis-comfort..." Is religion, as in war and everything else, comfort in the one thing you cannot get by looking for it. If you look for the worst, you may find comfort in the end; if you look for comfort you will not get either..."—C.S. Lewis.

Ethics of suicide doubtful

In Tuesday's edition (Nov. 15), Chris Miller asserted that Oregon's new suicide law "is the most ethical and humane law" that he has ever seen. Given Mr. Miller's expertise on ethics, he has three questions for him:

First, who says it is ethical for anyone to kill himself?

Second, who says that you get to decide when your suffering has become unbearable, and that you have had enough?

Third, who says that suffering ends at death?

Smokers have rights, too

I am writing in response to Kel Manoo's article about smoking outside of doorways. Well, Miss "fish out of water," get used to the fact that people smoke.

We "weak people that succeed to peer pressure and the whims of society" have just as much right to the outside air as you do. The way I see it is, you have a choice to either deal with us "smelly smokers" or hold your breath the rest of your life. It is too bad for you that you have a "case of very picky bronchitis." It sounds like if you don't breathe, you'll expire. "It's your personal problem, deal with it and stop blaming us "smelly smokers" for your personal health condi-tions.

I'm not sure everyone particular-ly cares for your scent, but it is not as though those people are going to write the school newspaper to complaints.

I say just as much tuition to go to this university as you do. Therefore, I have just as much right as anyone else to smoke or not to smoke at any doorway I choose. It is unfortunate for you that they printed your picture next to your article. Be aware of doorways; us "smelly smokers" know who you are.

Since I have left my parents behind and their opinions on how I should spend my money, your opin-ion on "wanting all our money" is none of your business.

In your article, all I hear you do is complain about smokers. Maybe finding a solution to sell everyone's needs should be the issue. We do have choices, like taking from our hard-earned money to pay for tuition and build shelters for us "smelly smokers." If that sounds unreasonable, stop complaining or come up with an accommodation that will satisfy everyone involved. Until we "smelly smokers" keel over and die over our "weakness" we all live in this world together. Let's find solutions.

MERRY CHRISTMAS
ASUI hearings not ‘witch hunt’

This letter is in response to the Las Vegas Sun story and Chris Miller’s editorial in Friday’s Argonaut regarding the recent ASUI Senate meeting and impeachment of ASUI President John Marble.

First, by Marble’s own admission, he failed to fulfill the required 48 hours per semester (as few as 14), yet signed time sheets to receive full pay—$46 a month in student monies—for a job not done. In September, the Senate considered impeachment but abandoned the idea because it seemed a severe action, and Marble was instead offered another chance. Marble agreed (was not “forced”) to apologize for failures by drafting a letter to students, in which he promised to “work diligently to ensure that this does not happen in the future.” John Marble’s presidency has not changed its course since those summer months: he still signs off time sheets; misses numerous committee and Senate meetings, and his own Cabinet meetings; and skipped (without even making a possible replacement) October’s all-important State Board of Education meeting.

Senators then decided that Marble’s indifference to student needs had gone too far. After informing Marble of our concerns on several occasions and asking him to show up after a half-dozen times, we took action. As a body, the Senate has long been criticized by students and the Executive for not putting students first. Yet when we attempt to correct some-thing very wrong—when student dollars are being fraudulently accepted and student concerns are not being addressed because the president is unresponsive—it is labeled a “witch hunt.”

To set the facts straight, we offer the following:

“Though, as Miller states, this is an “attempt to do good,” it is NOT ‘misogynist’ (all points are based on months of EVIDENCED violations) and calling it a “personal attack” is laughable—we would impeach Marble only because, at best, he has done his job poorly and, at worst, not at all.

“During Wednesday’s hearing, the Senate amended a bylaw (which has since been vetoed by Marble himself) to correct a flawed portion relating to all future impeachment proceedings, NOT simply to allow Marble to be tried within his term of office.

“Marble’s hearing will be a day (NOT minuted) before the new president is sworn in—so neither the impeachment bill, we wanted the hearing to be held on the first possible date but other senators thought the Senate’s image might somehow benefit if it were held Dec. 6 and got the motion passed so, unfortunately, even when it is found that Marble did not do his job, nothing can or will happen.

This bill was authored not to give Marble “a slap in the face,” but because he has not been accountable to students—it is funny that presidential candidate Sean Wilson has been able to hold an accountability, yet when a vote comes up to actual-ly make the person accountable, Wilson waffles and votes AGAINST his own campaign plat-form.

“Finally, if, we were to “let it lie” as Miller suggests, we would be saying to feuding leaders—three weeks before a new group is sworn in—that nothing will happen and no one will care if an ASUI job is not done.

The fact that Marble has not done his job is a given; why did he do it is anyone’s guess. Because he already had “ASUI President” on his resume and could care less about students? Because he got away with it before so why start working now? Because his wife is still ill? Who knows? If this were the case, Marble should have fol-lowed the example set by Activities Board Chair John Hoyne. When Hoyne recently became ill and could not fulfill his duties for two weeks, he turned over responsibili-ties to his Vice-Chair and DID NOT receive student funds for time not worked, unlike Marble.

With these FACTS in mind, it should be clear why, as senator, we did not “let it lie” and why, as UI students, you should not, either.

LaRocco’s loss a shame for Idaho

The new Memorial Day—Nov. 8, 1994. A time that will live in infamy, for it was the day that Idaho lost its most respectable and dignified leader. After four years of honorable service, First District Congressman Larry LaRocco was retired from public service. During his two terms in the U.S. House of Representatives, Congressman

LaRocco was a champion for human rights, environmental pro-tection and women’s issues. Congressmen LaRocco never stopped fighting for what made Idaho the beautiful state it was. While the ballot box may tally dif-ferent-ly, Larry, you will always be a winner in my book.

This letter would not be com-plete without saying a few words about the challenger who defeated Congressman LaRocco. Beginning immediately and continuing over the next two years I urge all of you to closely watch what Mr. Chernoweth does while representing Idaho. When we look back over her first term in office in two years and see our environment destroyed, our wildlife endangered, our forests raped and our human dignity and civil liberties trampled on, don’t say you weren’t warned, for this is what’s in store for what used to be the most remarkable state in the Union.

And now, I must conclude my remarks, as I have a great task ahead of me. As soon as our law-ler graduate in six weeks from the University of Idaho, I have begun looking for employment. Now I must expand that search in beyond our borders. We have proudly called this state home for 25 years. I am no longer proud to call Idaho home.

Letters to the Editor

Tendencies can be overcome

I'm writing in response to all the letters addressing homosexuality that have been recently submitted. Don't get me wrong, it isn't easy to just jump into the middle of a heated discussion over such a controversial issue. I just feel the need to give my input. While I'm at the risk of being called a "gay-basher" or some other hateful name, I would like to compare homosexuality to alcoholism.

Now before you jump the gun saying they have nothing at all in common. Alcoholism is related to many broken families and strained relationships. So is homosexuality. Hint: Notice I said "related," NOT "a cause of." Many alcoholics are hurtling and confused. So are many homosexuals (at least the few I know are and I've heard of many others). It can't be easy being gay or addicted to alcohol.

Alcoholism and excessive drinking is looked upon as "bad" by society as a result of accidents by drunk drivers and abusive behavior while under the influence. Homosexuality is looked upon as "bad" because it caused the initial spread of AIDS in this country and many think it is immoral. Note I am stating overall views here, not necessarily my own.

Alcoholism can lead to health problems like liver failure and brain damage. Homosexuality can lead to colon cancer and AIDS. Neither is a "healthy alternative lifestyle." Families of victims of drunk driving deaths in this country and millions dying from AIDS cry out otherwise.

The scientific community has recently stated that they think a gene exists which gives a person the tendency towards alcoholism. They also think they may have found a gene that gives an individual the tendency towards homosexuality. The key word here is "TENDENCY." Scientists know that a person's characteristics are determined by their genes but also by their environment. How many people do you know who say, "O.K., my parents are both alcoholics, so I probably have the alcoholic gene." I guess I'm an alcohol who, I might as well drink alcohol? People who know they may have a tendency towards alcoholism stay away from alcohol. And many people who discover their problem later go to support groups to help them fight their tendency. They learn how to resist alcohol.

Everybody is saying that homosexuals are "born that way" so they can't help their behavior. I say that homosexuals may be born with a tendency to engage in homosexual behavior, but that the tendency can be overcome. I know of a man who was a homosexual, but is no longer. He states that his faith in Jesus Christ gave him the strength to totally overcome his homosexual tendencies. Whatever it was, it worked because he is now married and happily heterosexual.

People say that no one would have right choice to be gay. Who would want to be labeled, jeered at, discriminated against? Well, why would anyone choose to be an alcoholic? Alcoholics could lose their job, their friends, their families. No one chooses their genetic tendencies, but everyone can choose whether to drink or not to drink, to engage in homosexual behavior or not. I'm not saying it's an easy choice, however.

People claim that the saying "Love the sinner, hate the sin" is a bunch of bull. Well, there are alcoholics in my family. I love them very much, but I don't love their alcoholism or the results of it. I think it is possible to love a homosexual, but hate his/her destructive behavior. I'm sure many families out there feel this way.

"The first sign of a problem is denial." This is true for alcoholism. I believe that homosexuals are just "homosexualities" in denial. They don't think they can change their behavior so they give up, or if they do think they can change they don't want to.

My last point is if some day they start to implement quotas for hiring homosexuals as a minority group, they had better start hiring alcoholics as well. Behavior, whether an innate tendency or not, should not be a basis for minority status.

Celtic celebration comes to the Palouse

Kate Beasley
Staff Writer

On December 6 at 8 p.m., Dancing at Lughnasa opens at the Hartung Theatre. This is a story of six unmarried sisters eking out their lives in a small village in Ireland in 1936. We meet them at the time of the festival of Lughnasa (pronounced too na sa) which celebrates the pagan god of the harvest with drunken revelry and dancing.

Their spare existence is interrupted by brief, colorful bursts of music from the radio, their only link to the romance and hope of the world at large.

The action of the play is told through the memory of the illegitimate son of one of the sisters, as he remembers the five women who raised him, his mother and four maiden aunts. He is only seven in 1936, the year his elderly uncle, a priest, returns after serving for 25 years as a missionary in a Ugandan leper colony.

For the young boy, two other disturbances occur that summer. The sisters acquire their first radio, whose music transfers them from correct Catholic women to shriveling, stomping bachelors in their own kitchens, and he names his father for the first time, a charming Welsh drifter who strolls up the lane and sweeps his mother away in an elegant dance across the fields. From these small events spring the cracks that destroy the foundation of the family forever.

Brian Friel was born in Ireland in 1929. He achieved sudden prominence with Philadelphia, Here I Come! in 1964. He received the 1980 Irish-American Cultural Institute Award and has produced plays on NYC off-Broadway and the BBC. In Dancing as well as in other of his works, Friel uses autobiography to present more universally relevant themes.

Dancing involves a memory of another time when Michael, the narrator, is just beginning to sense a difference between what things seem and what they really are.

In many ways Lughnasa is anthropological and reflects the author’s own upbringing and relationships with his mother and the aunts that raised him.

The actors performing in Dancing at Lughnasa are as varied as the characters within the play. Two of the “sisters” have acted professionally in theatre and on T.V. Others are in graduate programs at UI. Their talent and richness to their roles. This will truly be a delight for the sensi.

The last performance at the Hartung, The Secret Garden was sold out every night. Be sure to get your tickets early. Reserved seating tickets can be purchased at Ticket Express 885-7212 or 1-800-347-4663 (outside the Moscow/Pullman area).

Adults are $8, Seniors $6, stu- dents and children $5, and UI students are free at the door with a valid ID. Performances are December 6-10, at 8 p.m. and December 11 at 2 p.m.

Maggie (Holly Allen Marshall) comforts Kate (Kelly Quinnett) in Brian Friel’s “Dancing at Lughnasa.”

The play runs Dec. 6-10 at the Hartung Theatre.

Two dynamic speakers will give presentations at Washington State University on Dec. 1. The first speaker is Vernon Belcourt, head of the National Coalition on Racism in Sports and Media. Belcourt will discuss the history of the American Indian Movement, as well as FBI and CIA surveillance and covert action.

Belcourt, from Anishinabe, Minn., has been active in the bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington D.C., the International Indian Treaty Council, and has lectured at more than 100 universities across the country and abroad.

Yvonne Swan, a spokesperson for the International Indian Treaty Council will also speak. Swan will discuss environmental protection and legal advocacy, women’s issues, and prisoner’s rights.

Swan, originally from Colville, was convicted of second degree murder for killing a child molester who threatened her children in 1973. She was eventually acquitted in 1979 after an appeal. Swan’s case set a jury instruction precedent called the “Warrior Instruction,” used in cases of self defense.

Yvonne Swan will speak at WSU Dec. 1 at 7 p.m. in the Compton Union Building

Swan coordinates the Indigenous Prisoners Rights Project, a program that focuses on religious freedom and policy reforms in penal institutions. She is also the information director for the International Treaty Council office in San Francisco. The program is sponsored by Ke-Av-Mah, a Native American student group at WSU.

The program begins at 7 p.m. in the Compton Union Building Auditorium and is free and open to the public.

Task Force plans to educate Palouse

Amy Hillsenour
Lifestyles Editor

There is a new group at the University of Idaho called the HIV Task Force. The group is an outgrowth of the spread of HIV to the Idaho campuses.

The university has also been notified by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare that a particular strain of HIV is spreading among the population.

It appears that the virus is spreading more rapidly among people in the Palouse area than in other parts of the state.

The Task Force plans to hold a number of awareness events in order to educate the public about HIV and AIDS.

The group is also working on a campaign to educate the public about the dangers of HIV and AIDS.

The Task Force is made up of students, faculty, and staff at the University of Idaho. The group is also working with the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare to develop educational programs.

The Task Force is a part of the university’s commitment to dealing with HIV.

It plans to educate and provide outreach programs about HIV and also follows university guidelines about HIV and the treatment of individuals infected with the disease. The task force wants to help ensure that everyone is treated well, Gelletly said.

"HIV is a very real, present and close-at-hand threat to our individual selves and society," Gelletly said.

People need to learn about HIV and use that knowledge to protect ourselves and those we love. It is important for all of us to realize the disease has extreme effects on those it infects and reach out to them, Gelletly said.

Gelletly explained that HIV is often regarded as primarily a homosexual disease, but that is not the case. "The fastest spread of HIV is in heterosexual reserves," Gelletly said.

Also, among men 25-44, the leading cause of death is AIDS; not shootings, auto accidents or heart disease.

The purpose of the HIV Task Force is to develop HIV education prevention programs, provide information resources, and most recently, the coordination of World AIDS Day events at UI on Dec. 1.

The group currently has about twenty-five members, but anyone who is interested is welcome to join in with this effort.

The short term goals of the HIV Task Force include education about HIV, increasing understanding, and2 ensure awareness of the events of this week that include a forum on sex in the '90s, red ribbon days, and a video/speaker presentation Dec. 1.

The long term goals for the Task Force include continuing to hold regular activities several times a year, working to increase understanding and helping the university with its policies and procedures in terms of HIV.

Included in the celebration of World AIDS Day, red ribbons are available for wearing all through out the week at living groups and other on and off campus buildings and businesses. Everyone is encouraged to wear a ribbon in support of AIDS awareness.

One of the more important aspects of HIV/AIDS awareness is that this disease affects everyone, not just homosexuals or sexually promiscuous individuals.

Hemophiliacs can contract the disease through contaminated blood transfusions. While this rarely happens, today before the disease was fully discovered many individuals were infected this way.

Regardless of who is infected, how they got infected, or why they were infected, we should support those who are affected by this terrible killer. We should not only support the victims of this disease, but their friends and families as well.

HIV is a very real, present and close at hand threat to our individual selves and society.

Dr. Susan Gelletly

On Nov. 30 at 7 p.m., in the Student Union Dorothe Theatre there will be panel discussion "Sex in the '90s." Representatives from the Washington State University Wellness Center, the Pullman Planned Parenthood office, the Moscow Health Department, and a UI professor from the psychology department who teaches a class about human sexuality will be present.

On Dec. 1 the Student Union will participate in a "Day Without Art," in which all art will be draped with cloth to show a world without art. At 6:30 p.m. Dec. 1 there will be a video, "Close Enough to Touch," about Joyce, a woman from Spokane and her family and how they deal with living with HIV. After the video, Joyce and her family will be present for a discussion.

Everyone is encouraged to attend the various events this week and increase their awareness as well as understanding about HIV and AIDS.
Cowboys rely on big plays, win 38-21

Joseph and Fields torment Idaho again with long scoring runs

Andrew Longteig
Sports Editor

I t seemed like the first game of the season. However, the fact was the sixth-ranked University of Idaho football team was in the NCAA I-AA playoffs against No. 5 McNeese State in Lake Charles, La.

McNeese State compiled 256 yards on 33 plays, helping them to a 38-21 victory over the Vandals, sending Idaho to Moscow and the Cowboys to Missoula to face Montana in the second round.

The Vandals (9-3) were sloppy, especially on offense where they finished with a season-low 263 yards total offense.

After a 64-yard Brian Brennan touchdown pass to Dwight McKinzie, Idaho took a short-lived 7-3 lead.

The Cowboys quickly retaliated with an 83-yard touchdown by athletic quarterback Kerry Joseph, who wasn't touched.

"That guy can fly," UH head coach John L. Smith said in the Lawton Tribune. "He's a tremendous athlete. The guy is a tremendous football player and one we were dreading coming in here."

On McNeese State's first drive in the third quarter they scored yet another 83-yard touchdown — through the air, nonetheless.

Joseph hooked up with wide receiver Terrance Davis for the score.

Things couldn't get much better.

Spikers host Central Florida in first round

The Idaho Vandals sent the message Saturday. The message: We play a high level of volleyball in the Big Sky Conference.

The Vandals drubbed the Valparaiso Crusaders 15-2, 15-7 in an NCAA volleyball national play-in, earning a trip to the 48-team NCAA tournament which kicks off this week.

The NCAA compiles power ratings of each conference every year. The Big Sky Conference did not rate high enough in the NCAA national powerhouse list, forcing the Vandals to win a one-person play-in match before advancing to the national tournament.

Idaho won its third straight Big Sky title last week with a five-game win over Montana to receive the play-in berth.

Saturday's matirialization of Valparaiso vailed the 19th-ranked Vandals into a first round matchup with the Central Florida Knights (31-10).

The TransAmerica Athletic Conference Champions swept Southeast Missouri State in a 5-game Saturday. The Vandals (30-2) will put their 30-match home win streak on the line when they host the Knights Wednesday night in Memorial Gym at 7:30.

A win Wednesday would send Idaho westward for a second round meeting with the sixth-ranked Rainbow Warriors of Hawaii.

"Like all but two of the Vandals this season, Valparaiso could not find a way to overcome the Vandals' lethal trio of Tristevil Yanchulova, Mindy Rice, and Brittany Van Haverbeke."

The Big 3 has combined for 82 percent of Idaho's kills this season and 51 of Idaho's 66 in the Big Sky. Yanchulova purred a game high 19 while Rice contributed 18 and Van Haverbeke 14. The trio hit .410, .343, and .429 respectively on the night.

The Vandals team hitting percentage was a robust .394 Saturday. Valparaiso put down just one block in Saturday's match.

"Rocking was the key to the game," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "We knew what they were going to do."

Despite seven service errors in the opening game, Idaho jumped to a 6-0 lead and reeled off the final seven points of the game for the 13-point margin.

The Indiana school stayed close in game two, trailing only 9-6 midway through the contest, but Idaho turned it up a notch, outscoring the Crusaders 6-1 down the stretch for the win.
Brennan, a freshman, appeared indecisive and was generally sub-par. He completed 19 of 32 passes for 183 yards and threw a season-high two interceptions.
The Vandals’ three scoring drives were of 17, 8 and 7 yards.
McNesse State’s agile defense shut down Idaho’s potent running attack. The Big Sky’s best running game gained only 124 yards.

Idaho's defense actually played well — excluding the big plays.

The Cowboys are now 2-0 against the Vandals, also winning 23-20 in the first round of the 1992 playoffs. Joseph and Fields, fresh-

Over 9,500 U of I Students Lost Their Voices!

They Didn’t Care Enough To Vote & Be Heard!

Every semester, students get the opportunity to elect their peers to serve in the ASUI. How does this effect you? Every year the ASUI administers a $1,000,000 budget that funds student organizations and activities. These elected officials represent you to the State Board of Education, Administration, Faculty and Staff.
Isn’t it time for you to regain your voice and be heard!
