A new 400 watt power boost for KUOI last week marks a breakthrough in six years of conflict with federal regulations and allows improved radio reception from the University of Idaho's student operated station.

On Jan. 6, the station shut down to install a $4,000 new antenna. The job was completed at 5:45 p.m., and KUOI's programs resumed on the air with an increased transmitting power of 400 watts. The power boost is a combined effort of the new antenna and a more compact and technologically advanced transmitter installed a few weeks ago, which cost $6,000.

KUOI Chief Engineer Jeff Kimberling said the station has been transmitting with 50 watts for over 20 years. Since the 1980s, KUOI has been unable to increase the wattage due to a Federal Communications Commission rule concerning interference with the television Channel 6 audio dial. Channel 6 transmits horizontally polarized radio waves very close to those of KUOI. Wattage increase at KUOI in the past, he added, caused overlapping and was prohibited in the FCC, said Kimberling.

Key to KUOI's expansion in the air is the new technology—a vertically polarized antenna—which means the radio waves oscillate vertically through the air, Kimballing said. Despite the closeness of the dial, the perpendicular nature of the waves between the two stations prevents interference and allows KUOI to increase its transmitting power.

Listeners in Moscow will notice the difference around town with no more dead or fuzzy spots. With a decent radio, Kimberling said, one can even tune in to alternative news and music from as far away as Pullman or Genesee.

The new equipment is a timely arrival for KUOI—1995 marks the station's 50th birthday. Station Manager Vicki Trierd said plans to celebrate include special giveaways on the air, a Mardi Gras concert in March, and programs such as Live in Lobby—where local musicians perform live on the air in the lobby of the station.

Although most major radio stations have several thousand watts, 400 is enough for KUOI to boast about—almost twice that of KGUU, Washington State University's student operated station.

Clintonsassaiss GOP plan to gut service program

Paul Richter and John M. Broder

DENVER—Moving aggressively to defend what he considers one of the crown jewels of his administration, President Clinton on Monday assailed Republican efforts to gut the 6-month-old national service program.

Clinton’s vigorous defense of the volunteer program marked a deliberate attempt to pick a fight with the new GOP majority in Congress over an issue on which Clinton feels he has the public’s support and the moral high ground.

In a speech here marking Martin Luther King Day, Clinton asserted that the program he has liked to includes a domestic Peace Corps is precisely the kind of initiative that government should undertake, encouraging volunteerism, local control and participation of charitable organizations.

"Most of all," the president said to an outdoor crowd estimated at 10,000, "this is about creating that new relationship of obligation and opportunity." Clinton added: "Instead of the slain civil rights leader who, Clinton said, shared the program’s view that "all of us had a responsibility to do our part and to serve." His comments came amid a broad White House counter-assault on the views of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who was quoted in a Newsworld column published Monday as saying that Clinton’s AmeriCorps service program was "a gimickey and veered volunteerism." Gingrich said that he was "totally unrelated to national service and indicated that he would use his power to kill the program, which costs $290 million this year and whose price tag is expected to approach $1 billion next year.

The national service program, a cornerstone of Clinton’s 1992 campaign platform, currently employs 20,000 young Americans in 300 local programs aimed at helping reduce class-size teaching, environmental cleanup, law enforcement and social work. Workers in the program, called AmeriCorps, receive a living allowance and limited health and dental care while they take part; full-time workers are entitled to a maximum $4,725 tuition grant at the end of a year.

In Washington, the director of the Corporation for National Service, Bill B.

Vegas bookmakers won’t give odds on Simpson case

Call them snobs, but Las Vegas bookmakers won’t be taking any action on the O.J. Simpson trial, at least not at the major hotels.

"Oh, you wouldn’t believe what kind of money I’ve seen here in this hotel," said Roger Simms, director of Sports and Racing at the Rio Suite Hotel and Casino. "That would be a very poor taste, like betting on a war." The answer was the same as Caesar’s Palace and Bally’s, not just because it’s in poor taste, but because it’s against the law to take wagers on anything other than sporting events.

Sims said there would be no odds-making out of Las Vegas either. But another bookmaker who asked not to be named said he’s heard of one bookie in Phoenix, Ariz., that was offering a number of betting options "just for the fun of it." He also said odds coming out of England are in favor of Simpson. "I think the last I heard was that something like 7-to-5 that he’d be acquitted," he said.

Students still awaiting new Vandal card release

Christine Erney

The new Vandal cards will be flatter, made of plastic and have more flexibility for the future, but they may not be here for a while.

Last April the Vandal Card Office purchased new video imaging identification equipment, which generates computer photos on identification cards through a special printer.

"There are advantages to having everything on the computer. If you've ever lost your wallet before, you know what a pain it is—you can't even prove to the bank who you are," said Taylor. "But with photo images on the computer, ID cards can be replaced in four or five minutes."

The new video imaging equipment uses no film as the old cut and paste laminating system did. The new special printer uses a four color ribbon to print images onto the cards.

"The instant film we were using was expensive. It was costing us 50 to 50 cents per photo," said Taylor. "That doesn't seem like much until you consider that there are 10,000 students here, and we replace about 800 in 1,000 lost cards a year."

The reason for the hold up with the new Vandal cards is that the university hopes to implement long distance calling services onto the back of the Vandal cards. Right now the university is in the process of choosing a long distance company.

"Our hope is that the university is such a large customer that AT&T, MCI, or Sprint will negotiate a good rate, giving the university a chance to make revenue, while providing students with a competitive rate," said Taylor. Taylor said he doesn't know when the new Vandal cards will be available in returning students. "It's hard to say," said Taylor. "Because even if the long distance company was chosen tomorrow, it would take six to eight weeks to get the information processed on the back of the ID cards. If it happens this semester, it will be late in the spring."

Another future application for the new Vandal cards is to make them accessible to automatic teller machines. "We haven't decided to proceed with that just yet," Taylor said.

Although the new video imaging identification equipment cost about $51,000, Taylor said it works out to a good service and fair price per card.

"The new cards will be easier to use, easier to replace and provide a better service to the students," Taylor said.

Wolf release creates a stir

Reintroduction to central Idaho controversial, risky

Russ Wright

The U.S. Department of the Interior went ahead with the reintroduction of wolves last week in central Idaho despite protests from the state government.

After a court battle failed to stop the release of the four wolves into the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness area, Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt could only see television aid in the transportation of the wolves into Yellowstone National Park—the area selected for the reintroduction.

University of Idaho Professor Emie Ables, who teaches a course on predators, has some concerns about the release, but feels the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department's attempt to "restore the original fauna" is "probably a good idea."

Newly elected Idaho Governor Phil Batt, however, is opposed to the idea. According to his press secretary, Batt does not believe there is any logic behind the reintroduction of the wolves and is "very concerned it will threaten our abilities to use natural resources."

Greg Nielson, former Idaho Director of Agriculture under Cecil Andrus, is now a representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, one of the groups which sued to stop the reintroduction. Nelson said the Bureau is very disappointed the injunction failed to stop the reintroduction of wolves last week did not stand.

"I hope they're all radio collared," Nelson said, "because if we win the court suit, they'll be required to take them back to Canada."

A total of twelve wolves were captured in Canada for transportation and release into the United States. Eight wolves were released into Yellowstone National Park and four were released into central Idaho. Plans call for more wolves to be reintroduced in the near future.

Central Idaho is "one of the few places in the lower 48 states with enough wilderness to contain the wolves," said Ables. "I doubt if wolves were very abundant in central Idaho before they became extinct in the United States, he said. Wolves are better suited to flatter, more open terrain such as that found in Yellowstons. But the large wilderness provided by central Idaho was apparently a major factor in its selection as new wolf territory."

Ables is concerned about the method of release being used by U.S. Fish and Wildlife officials, however. Ables said the wolves in Yellowstone were released into a pen to become acclimated before being turned loose into the wild—known as a "soft release."

The wolves in central Idaho, however, were given a "hard release"—the small cages they were transported in.

"A hard release is a mistake," said Ables. "Let's ease them into the new environment."

Regardless of the method of release, many people in Idaho are concerned about the new presence of the wolves. Ranchers in particular are concerned about livestock introduced in the future.

Smoke detected in Administration Building

Five fire trucks, two fire department vehicles and an ambulance responded to a call after smoke was detected in the foreign language wing of the Administration Building around 1:00 p.m. last Thursday.

Ray Miller of the Moscow Fire Department said that someone had seen quite a bit of smoke above the auditorium. The smoke came from a bulletin in one of the fluorescent lights located in a third floor office.

The building was evacuated around 1:50 p.m. and no injuries or damages were reported.

Professors to hold roundtable
UI professors Dan Zirkle and Kari Olson will hold a roundtable tomorrow discussing the current design of the university's undergraduate educational system. All meetings will be from 12:30-1:30 p.m. in the Student Union Silver and Gold Room. The event is free and open to the public. For more information, contact Suzanne Loker in the College of Agriculture at 885-6546 or Pam Farmer at 885-6009.

Poems wanted for new contest
Spurwogass Poetry Forum is sponsoring a new contest for the best poem, for which a grand prize of $500 is being offered. Each poet may enter one poem only, 20 lines or less, in any style, on any subject. There is no cost to enter. There are 24 other cash prizes to be awarded. The contest closes Jan. 31, and winners will be notified by Mar. 31. Poems should be sent to Spurwogass Poetry Forum, Dept. NT, 203 Diamond St., Sistecville, WV 26775.

Career Services workshop times
UI Career Services Center will offer orientation workshops tomorrow at 9:30 p.m. and Thursday at 2:30 p.m. All workshops are free. Pre-registration is recommended. For more information visit the Career Services Center in Bink Hall or call 885-6121.

Help WSU men's volleyball
The Washington State University men's volleyball team is sponsoring a four-on-four volleyball tournament Jan. 22. Funds earned from the entry fees will go towards helping the team which is not a varsity program and therefore funded. The entry fee is $20 per team. Teams must be registered by Jan. 20. There are two different places to pick up entry forms: Godfathers' pizza in Pullman or at the WSU CUB Room B-22. Entry fees may be turned in at CUB B-22 by 4:00 p.m. Jan. 20. For more information, call Mark at 334-3759.

Idaho Native Plant Society to meet Thursday
The Idaho Native Plant Society will meet Thursday at 7:30 p.m. with a program on "The Special Forest Products Industry" in Room 200 of the Forest, Range and Wildlife Building. The meeting is free and open to the public. Please use the Lise Street entrance.

$2,000 offered in essay contest
The Instiution for World Capitalism is sponsoring an essay contest with a $2,000 prize being offered for the winning essay. The topic for the contest is "Capitalism and the Failure of Socialism." The deadline for entries is Jan. 31. Entry forms can be obtained by calling 904-744-9986 or writing to: Dr. Mark J. Perry, IWC Director of Policy and Research, Jacksonville University, 2800 University Boulevard North, Jacksonville, FL 32211. By e-mail: iwo@jacksonville.edu.

program is people expect to win and winning is important here...and we intend to continue winning," Tormey said at the Jan. 9 press conference. "The new coach was unavailable for further contact, due to a recruiting mission.

There is some speculation as to why Smith would leave a winning program at Idaho, and go to a mid-1iter program at Utah State, which finished 3-9 last season. Liske pointed out that many contributing factors influenced Smith's decision, and denied that Smith's decision was based on money or financial status.

When asked about the University of Idaho's number of keeping successful football coaches, Liske said, "The head coaching position at the U of I is a good position to have...the coaching position here could be a very good step in furthering a career."

Smith had been the head football coach at Idaho for six years, and compiled a record of 32-22.
"John L. chalked up more wins than any other coach in Vandal football's history, and he has treated the academic and personal development of his student-athletes...he blossomed into a highly recognized coach during his time at Idaho," President Zinke said.

Smith is far from the first Idaho coach to leave Moscow for a bigger college football program. Dennis Erickson (1962-85) started the winning tradition of Vandal football in the early 80s, but soon left to coach Wyoming.

Washington State, Miami, and now the NFL's Seattle Seahawks. Keith Gilbertson (1986-88) followed Erickson, but his stay was short as well, leaving after three years to lead Colorado State and later at Caliifornia. Smith is just the last of successful Vandal coaches to leave for a bigger school, although some would argue Utah State probably could not beat Idaho on its best day.

Since the head coaching position at Idaho has been regarded as somewhat of a stepping stone for coaches, Liske was overwhelmed by the interest in the open coaching position. Liske had looked to former Vandals to fill the position. The UI selection committee interviewed three finalists including Scott Linehan, a former player at UI and a current assistant at UW and Tim Lappano, another former UI player and current assistant at California. Although Tormey has only been on the job a few days, he has already started to organize his coaching staff, beginning with the decision to keep four current Vandal assistants. Nick Holt will remain as the defensive coordinator and linebacker coach. Jim Sester will continue to be the recruiting coordinator and defensive line coach, and Greg Olson and Todd Hovness will still remain on the staff, but their duties are still unknown.

John L. Smith announced that he was leaving UI for Utah State in a press conference on January 3.

Trend千里 was again cited as the source of the pain and Dr. Chin did not order any tests to be conducted. Instead he prescribed Feldene and informed her that it could take a long time to heal and all she could do was wait.

While Carroll waited for her leg to heal, the giant cell tumor located inside the tibia bone in her right leg grew through the tibia bone, causing an incredible amount of pain and damage. On Oct. 27, Carroll entered surgery to remove the giant cell tumor from the inside of her right leg's tibia bone. She does not yet know whether additional surgery will be needed.

Attempts were made to contact Rosemary E. Carroll, but she was unavailable for comment.

The front page of the Jan. 6 issue of the Daily News reported the $2.5 million tort claim.

Dr. Chin said, "I'm taken off guard here." Apparently the Health Center has not received any claim of this incident before the Daily News article was written, and according to Dr. Chin, they still have not.

Dr. Chin said, "Not all of the facts have been presented." But he was unable to say more on Carroll's case because of doctor-patient confidentiality.

"I am concerned that the Student Health Services will be tarnished by this claim," Dr. Chin said, "in view of all of the accomplishments over the past five years since I've been director."

Under Dr. Chin, two women physician, Dr. Susan Getzky and Cathy Hansen, have been added to the staff to concentrate on women's health care issues.

Mary Schwantes, a nutritionist, was added to help students become aware of preventive medicine. She counsels on such things as eating disorders and diabetes.

Other accomplishments include adding two pharmacists and doubling the nursing staff. Future plans being considered for the Health Center are dentistry and physical therapy.

Dr. Chin hopes that these accomplishments won't be lost in view of this claim. He said, "Since the Daily News article I've been pleased that many students have voiced their support and confidence in our services."

UI receives accreditation

The University of Idaho received accreditation in December 1994 from the Commission on Colleges from the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges. "This is the first time that UI has been stronger than it was in 1964 and it has grown and improved in every respect since the interim evaluation in 1989," the report said.

UI's accreditation committee can take pride in this reaffirmation of quality, President Ellis Zintzar said in a prepared statement. "The visiting team noted the progress UI has made since the last review and delineated challenges for the future. The accreditation committee commend- ed UI for advancements such as a significant increase in sponsored program activity and its designation as a Research II institution by the Carnegie Foundation for Teaching; the expansion and remodeling of the library; and a commitment to becoming a more gender-balanced and culturally diverse campus. The university was commended for various other advancements as well.

Students see nation through exchange program

80 percent of applicants go to school of first choice

Geoff McClelland

Consulting writer

The National Student Exchange (NSEI) provides opportunities for students to experience different environments, said John Sawyer, director of the University of Idaho NSEI program.

There are 120 schools which participate in the NSE program. Sawyer estimates that 80 percent of the students who sign-up are placed at the university they list as their first choice. For instance there were five UI students this year who listed the University of Hawaii as their first choice and all of them are currently attending school there.

"Lots of Idaho students like to go somewhere where it doesn't snow," said Sawyer. "We send a lot of students to places like Hawaii or Arizona. A few schools are harder to get into and students who list them as first choice may only have a 50-50 chance of being selected." So far this year the UI program has 45 national exchange students. Students exchanging to other universities may pay the Idaho rate of tuition to attend school there or pay that university's standard rate, depending on the reciprocal agreement the University of Idaho has with the participating university.

The program is beneficial for students contemplating employment in an area of the country to which they are unaccustomed. Sawyer said there was a student from a small town in southern Idaho who exchanged to the University of Delaware. When he came back he had changed from being apprehensive about getting a job in a big city to being excited about it.

The program gives an opportunity for students to experience the diversity of our own country. Students who exchange to the South will write home saying, "Hey, it's really different down here," said Sawyer.

"Back east there are a lot of toll roads, it's a tax, but people don't mind," said Sawyer pointing out the differences in attitude toward taxation between the East and the West. "They're just used to paying more taxes and people have different values than we're used to in the West," he said.

The biggest fear for students going on an exchange is not knowing anybody, said Sawyer. Most of the students who participate are traditional students and have the fear of being anybody else who recently came out of high school.

But it is also an excellent opportunity for students to check into good programs in their field of study at other universities, said Sawyer. "You should really go around to professors and faculty members to investigate where the good programs are." Students interested in participating in the NSE program should contact John Sawyer in Student Advisory Services, UCC 106. There is a $75 application fee and the deadline for the applications is Feb. 24.

6 THE ARGONAUT

Bar are concerned about livestock because they believe it is another federal Endangered Species Act which prohibits grazing, hunting, recreational and mining privileges. We're probably going to lose these privileges. We don't think this is right." Nelson believes it is ridiculous to use an animal as an endan- dered species and often hunts just to get a boundary and then label it as "endangered."

Nelson said the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife refused to wait for the Idaho legislature to pass its own wolf recovery plan on the agenda last week.

"The state legislature is going on," said Nelson, between the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife and the state of Idaho. The federal agency decided to go ahead with the plan because the negotiations ended.

"They thumbed their noses at the state," said Ables. "We ignored the concerns of Idaho citi- zens and the state government of Idaho.

Ables does not believe the wolves will become a major problem for ranchers. He believes any livestock losses would be minor to minimal and the losses could be reimbursed for their farms.

"There will be problems with livestock," Ables said. "This is obvious. No one has con- trolled them and there will not be enough wolves to create a serious problem. In addition, Ables says wolves have a dislike for coyotes and will even kill them in the competition for food and territory. Ables believes there may even be a reduction in the number of coyotes which cur- rently pose a serious problem for ranchers.

"Wolves mean less coyotes," said Ables.

It is legal, however, to hunt coy- otes. With the Endangered Species act, wolves which become a problem for ranchers can only be destroyed by Fish and Wildlife officials and not by the ranchers themselves.

Nelson concedes the wolves will have the effect of reducing the coy- ote population—but it would only be a temporary situation as the wolf population would expand to fill the niche. "It may be a positive thing, but it wouldn't last long," he said.

Ables said wolves have a highly structured social organization and run in packs which average seven to eight wolves per pack with a range which covers 100 square miles or more. In addition, wolves have a "fairly high reproductive potential" which is almost never attacked in the wild.

"One only female in the pack," said Ables. Each female can have two to six pups per litter, but the pups' chances of surviving to adulthood are low.

Wolves differ from coyotes in that coyotes often run on only in pain whereas wolves will run and hunt in larger groups. Wolves are also known for their ability to coordi- nate a hunt in order to bring down much larger prey such as burros or elk.

The actions of the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife have left some feelings of resent- ment, however, "We'll take the wolves," said Nelson, "if the Canadians will take the U.S. Fish and Wildlife department."
Borah Outlawry of War Foundation offers courses

Three Special Topics courses will be available to students who still need to add a course for this semester. The courses are sponsored by the Borah Outlawry of War Foundation. They are one credit each and open to students from any major.

The courses include:

"Population: Peace and Conflict and Rural Development"
Instructor: Harley Johnson
MRTN 204/304 Section 04 meets every Monday from 3-5 p.m. beginning Mar. 7.

"Population Issues: An Impact Survey"
Instructor: Debra Godlinne
MRTN 204/304 Section 03 meets every Tuesday and Thursday from 12:20 p.m. beginning Mar. 28.

"Interpersonal Conflict Communication"
Instructor: Kristie DeNeue Hunt
MRTN 204/344 Section 05 or ADED 404/504 Section 02 meets every Tuesday from 10 a.m.-noon beginning Mar. 7.

The Borah Foundation is also offering a scholarship for waiver to the University of Idaho. Students must submit an essay on the topic of "Population: Peace and Conflict" to qualify for the scholarship.

The contest is open to any current UI student or any graduating high school senior. The deadline for submission is Mar. 3. For more details and copies of the essay guidelines call Martha Kitzow at 882-0716 or Sharon Scott at 851-8572.

Segal, called a news conference to declared to Russia's President, it's time to lay down a marker on Clinton's behalf.

"The president told me, 'This is my signature program... This is a program I am going to fight for today, tomorrow and forever,'" Segal said in the White House briefing room, flanked by AmeriCorps volunteers rounded up for the hurriedly arranged briefing.

Segal wrote to Gingrich on Monday inviting him to visit several AmeriCorps projects to learn the value of the program. "We obviously have some education work to do," with the new speaker, Segal said.

Gingrich praised the program's "idealism" when Clinton proposed it in 1993 but said it would inevitably grow into a huge and expensive bureaucracy. "He voted against it, but 26 House Republicans and seven GOP Senators voted for the public service program.

Gingrich's office was closed for the King holiday. Gingrich could not be reached for comment.

The program is expected to enroll 35,000 young people this year and as many as 47,000 in 1996 in a variety of public service programs.

By working for their communities, then going to school with the grants the government gives to return, "these people are building the new economy," Clinton said. And because the program consists of decentralized local projects, "there's no bureaucracy at all."

"Newt's wrong," said Jeremy Vigil, 20, an AmeriCorps volunteer.

"We've been getting a lot of things done. I've tutored third graders. I saw investment in their math. We're fixing up houses. How can you say we're not working?"

This is the most complex renovation project the university has ever undertaken.

—Joanne Reece, Director of Capital Planning

funding comes through this spring, the whole project should be complete in early 1998. Reece pointed out that the renovation will not begin until the new physics/engineering building under construction is complete. This will give the university more space to house programs which may be affected by the work.

Engineering buildings to get facelifts

Vernon Spencer, Jr.
Consulting Writer

A $13 million renovation project of the university's engineering buildings is in the planning stages, according to Joanne Reece, director of Capital Planning.

According to Reece, the university has already received $2.1 million from the state's Permanent Building Fund and is requesting an additional $6.8 million. One million dollars in private funds will also be used for the renovation of Johnson, Gauss, Buchanan and Janss engineering buildings.

Another $5.5 million in private funds will be used to buy the site, equipment and build a 10,000 sq. ft. permanent building to house programs temporarily displaced by the renovation, said Reece.

Although the location for the building is still under consideration, "more than likely, it will be over by the Ag Engineering Lab," she said. The building will eventually house a variety of engineering programs.

Reece said the renovation is for four reasons: safety, accessibility, functionality of support systems and program growth. She said fire codes have become more stringent since the buildings were built, and the buildings are not in compliance with modern building codes. The university is also striving to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act by making the buildings more handicap-accessible.

She said infrastructure such as heating, cooling, water and power needs to be upgraded to support instruments in the buildings. Finally, programs in the buildings need to be outfitted to have the capacity to grow.

"This is the most complex renovation project the university has ever undertaken," said Reece. This project is more complex than most because the construction needs to be done without shutting down the programs that occupy the space to be renovated. It will also be stretched out over a long time, she said. Construction on Gauss and Johnson should begin in the fall of 1996, and, if Winter a season of change at UI

Despite the cold weather and the notable lack of students over the past three and a half weeks, business at the University of Idaho didn't stop for the holidays. In fact, quite a few events took place during the holiday break.

Governor Phil Batt introduced the biggest change of the season when he unveiled the Idaho state budget, which included a $229 million higher education budget, an increase of 7% from the previous year's allotment. The increase was not met with smiles all around, however, as the $7 million needed to finish construction of the new engineering and physics building was granted, it was accompanied by a $750,000 slash from the agriculture research/extension system. Despite the mixed news, his changes were carried out on top of UI, eliciting the second biggest increase of Governor Batt's proposed budget.

President Zinnser, meanwhile, was keeping things jumping at the Idaho Board of Education, with the proposed plan to create a statewide engineering college. The cooperative engineering college would grant a degree from UI, but would be formed with staff and faculties from Boise State, Idaho State and UI. Zinnser's plan, which was just presented to the State Board last week, is in competition with Micro's plan to create a $6 million program administered by BSU. The Board will decide later this month which plan to use.

For the first time in fifty years, an Idaho graduate is coaching football at UI. Chris Tormey, fresh from his preferred football coaching position at University of Washington, was appointed to replace John L. Smith, who vamoosed off to Logan, Utah to coach for Utah State University. Mr. Tormey becomes number 29 in the long line of head coaches at UI, and the first to see UI as a Big Ten Conference member.

Some changes didn't begin over break, but continued on during the holiday season. The renovation of McConnell Hall, begun approximately two months ago, continued over the break. So did the construction in front of Student Union, which has already yielded the Campus Copy Center and will eventually replace the Blue Bucket with the new food court, bringing Taco Bell and other national fast food chains to Moscow.

Holiday breaks were carried out on top of UI, even the McDonald's opened another restaurant in Moscow, right next to TR Video on the Troy Highway. TR Video moved their Third Street branch about two blocks down the road to an expanded location across the street from the old bowling.

Despite all the changes, however, some things remain the same. It's still cold outside. Gas is still more expensive on the Palouse than in Lewiston. And, school remains the same; even today, two consecutive classes, long lines at every conceivable office on campus, homework and late-night cram sessions. Life's an adventure.

faces trial for allegedly killing two Planned Parenthood workers.

C ongratulations, if you're reading this column, chances are you’re alive. Logically, this must mean that you are one of the most brilliant infant ever born! that you have survived the holiday season with some brain cells intact. Since you probably didn’t pay much attention to what’s been going on, here’s a recap of some of the thunderous pounding inside your skull, let’s take a look at some of what went on.

1) To the vast surprise of many, the NHL playoff series managed to come to an agreement with the team owners over their long-running salary dispute. After 103 days of fun and games euphemistically described as a “lockout” by the Wall Street Journal, the season was saved from cancellation. Play may resume next week, with which the entire sports fan who prefer hockey to baseball because it’s a real challenge to kick the crap out of some guy while walking on skates.

2) The latest in a long line of “pro-life” extremists, John C. Salvi III, started his arduous journey through the American judicial system by pleading not guilty to a murder count and counts of attempted murder. He has caused massive flooding, at least eight deaths and approximately seven million in damage. President Clinton declared 34 counties in California disaster areas, while Rep. Zoe L. Wilson tried hard to remember why the budget was needed again. At last report, Michael Huffington was standing on his roof, still insisting that abandoning houses would shift the election.

3) In regional news, the reintroduction of wolves to Yellowstone National Park was planned, despite a last-minute emergency order from the 10th U.S. Circuit Court. Making sure the wolves didn’t get spotted, Project Wildlife officials remain confident that the reintroduction will go smoothly, while ranchers and farmers remain confident that they can shoot and kill every wolf out of the reintroduced wolves and keep the local silt from that pesky Mother Nature’s evil plan.

And last, but not least, UI started the spring semester of 1995 today. As the lines formed at the Bookstore, mud was spreading and complaints were heard, mostly from people who just couldn’t understand why anyone in their right mind would schedule for fall, spring, and the first day of class on the same day.

Some things were just meant to be. The annual snow day.

A t what age do you become an adult in the eyes of your parents? You don’t. Ever. This is a hard thing to come to terms with, but unfortunately it is the truth. I was reminded of this painful fact the other day when I visited my parents for Christmas. It all came rushing back...the nagging, the watching, the wanting me to watch my language.

As a parent of two, it is your job to drive your crazy with the insistence that you are completely incapable of taking care of yourself. Yet, as a high school senior, this was the biggest source of angst in my life. There is nothing more humiliating to a fifteen year old than to have your mother show up at school, track you down and give you the lunch you forgot at home. This didn’t happen to me, of course, but I understand it. I don’t think that I have very far to go before.

Or, about having your par-tent drop you off at the school, down in the cafeteria I personally passed for these seniors for hours and to pull out of their hair when they found their friends. Hiding in the back of my parents station wagon was not the grand slam way I planned. Instead I enviioned a limo, or even better, dri-ing up in my own car. It was even more deeply acceptable to be dropped off by someone else’s parents because, under any circumstances, your own. I tried the drop-me-off-a-block thing but that’s nowhere to be seen. By the time I got to school the irritation continued, but it was a long distance irritation and easier to deal with. Nagging over the phone on my parents has its own peculiar ability to grate on a person’s nerves, but it was far easier to be bung up. The problem was, I kept instilling them to treat me as an adult instead of accepting the fact that I could never potentially began arguing politics, religion, anything to be bung up. Letters to the Editor

Sigma Nu means courtesy

We would like to express our thanks to the members of the Idaho Chapter of Sigma Nu fraternity, who helped our family out of a deep situation on Highway 8 near Bovill on Dec. 10. After badlyjudging the depth of snow and its van’s ability to plow through it, the entire family were stranded about 100 yards downhill from the highway. We had struggled quite awhile with little progress when two gentlemen stopped and offered assistance. They improved the situation, but it was clear we needed more help. Lo and behold, they flagged down the rest of their gang—the whole house (who were apparently on their way to a baby shower in Idaho snow country)! In short order, we were out of the hole and on our way.

We want everyone to know we are thankful for their enthusiastic assistance. They were helpful, respectable and definitely saved our day. Our deepest (pun intended) thanks go out to them and their positive example!

—John McNamara and Family

Traits just don’t compare

This letter is in response to Carlin Berreth, the woman who stated she shouldn’t compare to homosexuality. You stated that alcoholism and homosexuality are both genetic tendencies and “both are often rejected by people.” Did you take a survey? These two do not compare. Alcoholism is a problem—for anyone. One can step in and help a person overcome it.

As for homosexuality, you cannot say it is a “disease” to cure. You have never been a homosexual. Since you do not carry this “genetic trait” (I’ve been entirely proven that it is genetic), you cannot speak for them, any more than I can. I can only say that you do not realize what they have to put up with, especially from people like you. You are their problem, not vice versa.

The sad fact for you is that there are people and I know and love who have this “characteristic.” And just what are you going to do if you find out that they are? Try and “cure” them? Do they lose your love and friendship?

The majority I know don’t want “special rights”—they want the same rights we are all entitled. Unfortunately, you have abused those of those rights—the right to free speech—to hurt them and show them that there is one more person out there who thinks that they can be “cured” of something that is a part of who they are. Therefore, since you didn’t understand Joby Bias’ statements, I will spell it out for you: compare YOU with Stevie Wonder—you’re as blind as he is, but he’s perhaps the better person.

—Reenie Arnold

Talkin’ ’bout my generation X

What exactly is “generation X” and who came up with the whole idea to call it that in the first place?

As part of the infamous generation X, I would like to say that we don’t buy into the whole suppository, lazy, broadening mentality of generation Xers. In fact, I think that this is merely a stereotype, not a justifiable belief about this generation.

I just read an article in a magazine about this very thing. What is generation X? According to nearly everyone, a generation Xer can be spotted a mile away simply by their Doc Martens and dirty jeans. Since when did an entire generation become an icon for fashion fuxx pas? This is pitiful. Where did we go wrong that we were reduced to a bad wardrobe and an even worse hair day?

I think that generation Xers are confused. We don’t know how to do. So much has gone wrong in our short lifetimes, that we don’t know where to start to clean up the mess the preceding generations have left for us. Let’s take a look at what we have seen in our lifetimes, shall we?

There’s the Vietnam War.

Amy Ridenour

Nixon was hardly impeached. There were hostages in Israel. People knew and have strutted around in polyester butterfly collars, bellbottoms, and platform shoes. We wanted the Brady bunch and the Osmonds were a hit.

The Reagan years need not be mentioned. What about the Cosby Show? We grew up with threats of World War III, that the Soviet Union aimed nuclear missiles at our backyards. We thought that in 1984 people were going to become man-eaters and snack on our society until there was nothing left (or was that just an analogy of the state of governmental affairs)?

We witnessed the end of an era when the Berlin Wall came down. The Soviet Union disintegrated. The United States went to war with Iraq. The most deadly killer of all was discovered—AIDS. The Space Shuttle exploded. There are so many things to list, it’s no wonder we’re confused.

How could someone who grew up with this not want to know things down a little and question everything?

While we realize that the Cosby Show and the Brady Bunch didn’t provide for us the typical American housewife example, who wouldn’t want a little perfection once in awhile? Divorce rates are at an alarming rate. No wonder we don’t have an idolatrous view of the family unit. It’s more common in the ’90s if your parents are divorced than if they’re not. Many of us have had friends who suffered from drug and/or alcohol abuse. Some of us know people who have died from AIDS. Some of us have friends who have had abortions. Our generation has dealt with more in our short lifetimes than most of our parents did when they were our age combined.

I think people need to look at our generation for what it is, not what it appears to be in movies like Reality Bites. We know that reality bites, we’re not trying to hide from it. On the contrary, we’re trying to find our own place in the world in our own way because we see that the traditional way doesn’t always work very well. Besides, Reality Bites is not really an accurate description of how we all live.

Generation X is somewhat shallow minded. Give us a chance to do the great things we are destined to achieve. And please, don’t make fun of our clothes.
Hunting not a destructive activity

I am a hunter safety education instructor in neighboring Pullman, and feel that I must respond to the letter by Katie Kuttner in the Dec. 13 Argonaut regarding bear hunting. I am aware that the majority of the voting public is neither for nor against hunting, but when elections come they may vote on wildlife management issues based on what information is presented in the media. Ms. Kuttner argues for the elimination of two methods of bear hunting, baiting and hunting. This is the position of Palouse Voice For Animals, and has been the standard opening tactic for anti-hunting groups in a number of states because of several reasons. Relative few hunters actually hunt bears; popular culture portrays bears as "cute & cuddly" creatures; and the nature of the animal's behavior and habitat makes it a seldom-seen creature, lending the impression that it is scarce in these parts. Certainly, in the nearby Blue and Selkirk Mountain areas of Washington, bears are abundant. I think any big game researcher familiar with north Idaho would tell you they are plentiful there, and probably be able to show you signs of their presence.

The argument that Idaho's Fish and Game Department has so accurate data to estimate bear populations is misleading in its implication that wildlife biologists would willingly seek to overharvest the species. These professionals, in every state, have always worked to manage wildlife with the best data available to balance the populations of game species with the carrying capacity of the habitat. That management includes providing for the harvest of surplus animals, using methods appropriate to the species. Bears are normally reproductively crepuscular, and pretty good at avoiding human contact. Seeing tracks, damaged trees, and raided campsites is not equivalent to seeing a legally harvestable bear during a hunting season. Both baiting and hunting, with hounds, in some areas, may be the only way to find a bear; both methods also allow the experienced bear hunter to select the animal taken (for instance, many states forbid the taking of sow with cub). Neither method is an easy, sure-fire proposition, and with the limits in numbers that can be taken by individual hunters, the bears are in no danger of being "decimated."

Ms. Kuttner states that elimination of baiting and hounds could enhance the hunting experience for other hunters. Elimination of one does not enhance the other; it merely makes for a smaller group to pick on next time. In Colorado, Wayne Pacelle of the Fund for Animals testified that his only interest was in eliminating spring hunting, baiting, and hound hunting. But when that measure was passed, he returned to Colorado and tried to ban bowhunting for black bears, saying it was "cruel and inefficient." The method is to whittle down the hunting constituency, by choosing the less-supported types first, "demonizing" them in the public mind, and eliminating them. The object is to enforce the morbid perception that hunting is wrong—legislatively.

Sportsmen are not evil, greedy pillagers of natural resources. In fact, the bulk of the money providing for wildlife habitat, protection, and enhancement is paid BY sportsmen. Ask any anti-hunting group where its money goes—into fundraising and lobbying, advertising and legal fees. Not into protecting habitat that feeds and shelters game and non-game wildlife.

In closing, I'd like to quote Dennis Martin, manager of Virginia's black bear program: "Virgil and I have many more bears than we had 20 or 30 years ago, and it's BECAUSE of the sportsmen. Because of sportsmen, there's more wildlife of every variety to look at, to photograph and to hunt. Hunting is a recreational outlet that has a lot of value. Even the protectionists have to admit that, and those that don't simply aren't." Idaho has a wonderful wildlife heritage, in large part due to hunters. Don't let the anti's undermine that. Wildlife management is a job of scientific management, not emotional responses to informed baloney spouting. My best regards to Clint Rand and my friends in Idaho Wildlife.

Celebrate diversity and Civil Rights

Campus and community commemorate Civil Rights Leader's birthday

Valariee Johnson YFR

January is Martin Luther King, Jr. and Black History Month and students can take part in the celebration.

The Ethnic Diversity Task Force, in coalition with ASUI Productions and Student Advisory Services, is offering a number of events to commemorate the work being done for civil rights. Kimberly Bouchard, Educational Programmer of the Women's Center, says several groups have worked together on this project and encourages everyone to take part by coming to scheduled events.

To start off the celebration, a video entitled "The Speeches Collection: Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. will be shown in the lounge of the Women's Center today at 12:30 p.m.

Bouchard explains that the video shows raw footage of Dr. King from his earlier years as a young pastor in Montgomery, Ala. to the March on Washington and allows us to see how King's ideas developed.

Tomorrow at 12:30 p.m., also in the lounge of the Women's Center, Visions of the Spirit, a video about African American writer Alice Walker will be shown. The video explores Walker, author of The Color Purple, and her background of the civil rights movement in the 1960s and her political and social vision.

Also tomorrow, Martin Luther King III will speak at Beasley Coliseum at Washington State University at 7 p.m. King III is the second oldest son of Martin Luther King, Jr.

He is a human rights and political activist and, with his mother, Coretta Scott King, helped lobby to make his father's birthday a national holiday.

Adrienne Barnes will perform "I Am That I Am: Woman, Black at the University of Idaho Administration Building Auditorium Thursday, Jan. 19 at 7 p.m.

Leslie Hibbert, Chair and Mike Smith, Co-Chair of the "Martin Luther King, Jr. Celebrate Freedom Commissions" are thrilled to welcome Barnes to the celebration.

In her performance, Barnes portrays the character and spirit of the black women the lives and respects, such as Sojourner Truth, Harriet Tubman, Angelo Davis, Maya Angelou and others. Barnes goal is to educate, entertain, and inspire all those who witness her performance.

Smith, also a member of the Ethnic Diversity Task Force and Recognizing African American Concerns on Education (RACE), believes the program to be a chance to see how much people have actually done for the fight for civil rights.

Smith says that many groups have worked hard in order to get people involved and educated about the history of African Americans.

"There's a history of African Americans in this country as long and proud as white Americans and other ethnicities that we should all be educated about," Smith said.

Because of the demographics in Idaho, Smith feels that people aren't always aware of the issues of multiculturalism. He believes that while the protests and rallies were good in the 1960s, the approach to make change today should be an educational one.

"Although Martin Luther King, Jr. was instrumental in the fight for civil rights, there are many people who played a part.

We would really like to place emphasis on educating people about the role many played," Smith said. Smith also feels that teachers should bring up the issues of multiculturalism in class and students should be encouraged to talk about them.

egend of the Fall is a magnificent bison a western saga billing in its own immensity, its big music, its big scenery and, yes, its big hair. Brad Pitt sports a coif that protically comes right out and says, "Don't hate me because I'm beautiful." Oh, Brad, you silly, we'd rather hate the waving wheat.

Pitt plays the untameable Tristan, the second son of Col. William Ludlow (Anthony Hopkins), a cavalry officer turned cattleman. Sickened by the governor's treatment of the Native Americans, the colonel withdrew to a ranch in the Montana Rockies with his sons, the unlucky Alfred (Alfred Quinn), the unknowable Tristan, and the youthful idealist Samuel (Danny Thomas). Basically it's "Bonanza" without a Chinese house-boy. Instead there's a stubborn old Cree, One Cree (Gordon Tootoosis), who taught Tristan the skills of a great warrior and the secrets of nature. "He was a rock they broke themselves against," opines the sagacious Native American. Ah, Tristan, wouldn't that they had named thee Huss.

Growing up, the brothers are the dearest of friends, which they remain until Samuel returns from Harvard with the stunning Susie Fingrnan (Julia Ormond) open.

Though betrothed to Samuel, she is drawn to Tristan. Both are too honorable to act upon their desires, as opposed to Alfred, who can barely suppress his longing for the captivating Miss Fingrnan.

This plot is left to simmer when the brothers, against their father's wishes, ride off to fight in the First World War.

The story might have been written by Bertha Carland, but Steven Shilliday, formerly with TV's "thirtysomething," joined the adaptation of the Jim Harrison novel with the help of co-produ-ducer Bill Wittliff. As directed by Edward Zwick, the yarn doesn't seem so much wreak as sprawl across the screen in all its panoptic idiocy.

Shot in the Canadian wilderness near Calgary, it is a gorgeous anthem to an American West that never was, a Ralph Lauren's fantasy alp with husky boys in Chaps and pre-washed jeans. "Legends of the Fall" is rated R for violence, sexual situations and profanity.

Fedderson collection on display

Prichard Art Gallery starts off 1995 with modern Native American Art display

Joey Wellman

The Fedderson Collection of Native American Art will be on display at the University of Idaho Prichard Art Gallery from Jan. 27 to Feb. 27. Area artists Kevin Peters and Raye Azlee will also present their works in the balcony of the gallery. A reception will be held from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. on opening night.

Joe Fedderson, a printmaker/painter and professor at Everett State College, has comprised one of the finest personal collections in the country. The collection consists of 47 works by American Indian professional artists throughout the United States. According to gallery director Wally Mason, Fedderson's works are from a personal collection which he has bought and traded for over the years. "These types of exhibitions are planned two to three years in advance," said Mason. "Former gallery director Johanna Hays organized this one." The exhibition, managed by Fedderson, is touring under the auspices of Exhibit Towing Services, a program in the College of Fine Arts at Eastern Washington University. ETB is funded in part by the Washington State Arts Commission and the Washington Commission for the Humanities. Kevin Peters and Raye Azlee, two artists from the Nez Perce tribe, will present a variety of works, "seeking new approaches and concepts that are centuries old." "I don't want to copy the old piece," said Peters. "I'm a Nez Perce living in the twentieth century and I want my pieces to show that." Their exhibition will include an installation in one of the gallery upstairs.

According to Mason, an installation is when an artist accesses gallery space in order to alter the way it appears. "It is more involved and contemporary as opposed to hanging paintings on the wall," Mason said. Another gallery will contain ceremonial objects, drawings and paintings.

Related programs will include a lecture by Corwin Crammont on "Contemporary American Indian Art" in the CUB Auditorium at Washington State University on Jan. 30 at 8 p.m. A panel discussion, entitled "Contemporary Indian Artists: Identity and Community," will take place at the UI Prichard Art Gallery on Feb. 2 at 7:30 p.m.

Panelists include Peter Campbell, Corwin Crammont, Joe Fedderson and Carolyn Orr. The UI gallery is located at 414/416 South Main Street in downtown Moscow. A Gallery from Monday-Friday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. All events are free and open to the public.

Jan. 28 at 9 a.m. the Latah Human Rights Task Force is sponsoring a breakfast. Events are open to all members of the university and community. This is the time to make the resolution to become aware of differences and take the opportunity to join in the scheduled events to celebrate freedom.

"Every day should be human rights day," Smith said. "Every day should be a day to look at our differences and celebrate them."

'Literary Trivia' Full of Fun and Games

Helen W. Hill

It has no plot. It has no characterization. It has no scenery. Richard Lederer and Michael Gilliland's Literary Trivia: Fun and Games for Book Lovers is still a good read. What it does have is subject matter that the length and breadth of all history. What it offers is a challenging test of literary knowledge, arcane to obvious.

Lederer and Gilliland include sections on authors, titles, content of work, the Bible, mythology and Shakespeare. A chapter in the first section asks readers to identify authors from anecdotal accounts such as "as a young cadet, this American writer was expelled from West Point for reporting to a march wearing nothing but white gloves."

The second section includes a chapter entitled "The Spectrum of Literatures" which challenges readers to name works from a color included in the title and the author's name. Those for green included Ernest Hemingway, Robin Moore and Dr. Seuss. The third section covers plot and poetry, quotes and characters, opening lines and current language. Such things as "Who was Frankenstein?" and from whom did the Harry Potter series get its title. The next section includes quotes, Biblical facts and biblical inspiration of the book. Sentences are often interspersed with puns, riddles and uses in everyday speech.

The mythology focuses on that of the Greek and Latin gods. It tests a offer of general knowledge and how the names are used in current language. The Shakespeare section includes quotes, general knowledge and other literary works which border from this.

Literary Trivia is a good reference for secondary English and literature teachers and Janus Plural Panelist players. It also gives excellent examples of questions which test knowledge in novel formats.

The cover is Edgar Allen Poe. Ernest Hemingway wrote The Green Hills of Africa, Robin Moore The Green Berets; Dr. Seuss Green Eggs and Ham. Frankenstein is the mad doctor, not the monster. Linguists disagree as to whether wino is derived from the verb whimper or the "Popeye" comic character J. Wellington Wimpy of hamburger fame.

Library Trivia is a paperback original from Vintage Books and is approximately $10.

Lionel Hampton spring recitals begin

Amy Bideneur
Lifestyles Editor

Each semester the Lionel Hampton School of Music presents student and faculty recitals at the School of Music Recital Hall. Most recitals begin at 8 p.m. and are open to the public unless otherwise specified.

The first recital for the month of January will be a guest recital by Ed Dixon on cello. Tickets are $5 general admission and $3 senior citizen or student and are available at the door. James Reid, guitar, will perform a faculty recital Jan. 24. The Wind Ensemble will delight audiences in the Administration Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Jan. 26. The Lionel Hampton School of Music will host its annual High School Band Festival in the Student Union Ballroom starting at 5:30 a.m. and lasting until 5 p.m. on Jan. 26. The last performance for the month of January is the Kennedy Trio, a Faculty Chamber Music Concert beginning at 4 p.m. in the Recital Hall on Jan. 29. February starts off with a Student Composers Concert at the Recital Hall at 8 p.m. on Feb. 6. The other student recital of the month will be Kevin McDonald, euphonium, on Feb. 8. Both student recitals are at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall.

The first Jazz concert of the semester, featuring Jazz Band 1 and Jazz Choir 1, will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Recital Hall Feb. 7. Jay and Sandy Muehlig will perform a piano duo for a Faculty Concert Feb. 8, 7 p.m., also in the recital hall. The Auditorium Chamber Music Series kicks off the semester on Feb. 10 with the Fallas Guitar Trio. The performance is in the Administration Auditorium at 8 p.m.

For ticket information for this concert contact Ticket Express at 883-7212.

For additional information on upcoming recitals and concerts, contact the School of Music at 885-6231.

VERUCA SALT
AMERICAN THINGS

Veruca Salt—what does this name mean? Who cares? Their new album, American Thongs, is some of the best music of an indie gone corporate that I have seen in a long while.

Veruca Salt is neither banal nor sleepy. American Thongs has a blend of guitar and drums and holds with the thumping of a simple string and soft vocals by a female duo—Nina Gordon and Louise Post.

Their most prominent song, "Seether," is one of MTV's top videos and is definitely at the top of the alternative charts for a single. Yes, Veruca Salt is not a one-hit-wonder like many other bands.

The song following "Seether" is "Spiderman '79." The song follows an easy beat, as both Gordon and Post sing with accompanying vocals from Christina Lasky. Gordon and Post are both gifted vocalists; incorporating easy vocals with a strong style of guitar playing, as it is evidenced in the song "Frankenbeard," which is the main guitar theme that begins with a light, mellow harmony.

The guitar harmony stays throughout the song as the rest of the band advances into the song. All of the songs on this album are light. Yes, Veruca Salt is designing their own flavor which is appealing to the ear. Maybe it is their voices, or maybe it is the simple harmony in their songs which is sometimes lost in other bands.

Within their songs they speak of many things and all songs have a sort appeal to them. Veruca Salt, a Chicago foursome, are all experienced with pain. In their songs they speak about their pain and life as children; all from broken homes; they band together to create music that sings of their pain. Veruca Salt is a band that if you want to their show you would just stand up, letting the music enter you and course through your body.

You may even come out of the show with memories dredged up from the depths of your mental sorrow becoming an awakened memory, reminding you of things in the past. Veruca Salt's music has this affect on the human psyche.

American Thongs is definitely a CD to be obtained. It is available at all music stores on the DGC label.

—Matt Baldwin

TREEPEOPLE
ACTUAL RE-ENACTMENT

For their fourth and final album, Beale's Treepeople sink deep in to the Idaho dirt and deliver aJuicing, slyly guitar driven album complete with melangey angst which is good to the last drop.

The bands third release for OZ records, Actual Re-enactment, may very well be their best work yet.

Despite the fact that the Treepeople have decided to call it quits, the album proves to be a strong finish.

Veteran Treepension Scott Schmaljohs shares guitar duties with John Polle, who enters as the newest addition to an ever changing lineup.

Bringin with him a new bag of wind, Polle adds a definitive layer to the familiar Treepeople guitar laden sound. Quilts are what this album is about, the melodies are all over the place. They wander off down scattered paths and eventually wind up scattered in a un form way. Still evident is the funk punk angst that fuels the band's live shows.

Never more so than on "What I Mean to Think You Said," "Feed me" and "Liber vs. Heart." The band also shows off their softer side. Pollie's bag of wind proves to be the album's breakfast of champions. "Bag of Wind" turns through innocence sounding straight out off of a 1950's juke box before erupting into a sonic wall of sound.

Drummer Eric Akes and bassist Eric Carmell are the backbone of the solid pounding force behind the music.

Long gone is founding member Doug Marsh, who together with Schmaljohs helped chisel out the band's distinct sound.

Treepeople are true musicians and their talent is evident on these previous albums.

Nevertheless Actual Re-enactment still conjures up images of the bands past, blending together familiar sounds with a fresh outlook.

From the band that gave us Guilt Regret and Embarrassment, Something Vicious for Tomorrow, and Just Kids Actual Re-enactment is a positive note to end on.

Fiction imprint swims upstream

Paul D. Golford

November

The first books to be exclusively published under the imprint of Random House's emerging Random Ink are due soon and, if all goes well, the imprint will soon launch its own imprint.

Introducing Riverhead Books, a division of The Putnam Berkley Group.

Riverhead's spring list of one book looks out-and-out (see novels with strong social themes) against (via titles that explore spirituality and healing power).

Remarkable Recovery, written by Caryle Ginsburg and Marc Ian Barish, is a scientific study about breast implants and breast cancer.

Suzanne Metter, the publisher of this new venture, joined Putnam Berkley last year after a decade in the Random House organization, where she became one of the most powerful women in book publishing.

Among her achievements as president of Random House's Ballantine division, she founded the multicultural One World Imprint and co-edited an expanded publication of Sophy Turner's The Book of Angels, the first success in what has turned out to be a thriving genre of angelic titles.

Most readers may be obvious to which publisher's name appears on the books they purchase. However, in a market flooded with dozens of new titles each week, the launch and cultivation of an imprint is designed to alert readers and differentiate the offerings to those special collectors of those books steeped in the quality of life, in the meaning of life.

I want to have another person's life experience when I read fiction. And I feel that since our world is now so small and, because it's clear that there are people unlike me who live across the hall and across the street, I really want to have some notion of what it's like to be them. So I want to publish books and I want to know something about the world.

The author of the name "Random Ink," it's a combination of words that I like a lot." Pager said. "Random Ink will be a kind of books. They can influence people in different ways; some even are fast, some are slow. And, because it symbolizes to me discretion, intelligence, integrity, the craft of it all."

Peter Pan, 50, added: "It's possible that in my early 20s I was interested in how to get ahead and (being) a managerial woman and all those things and now I'm much more interested in the

lewis-Clark Center displays clothing

An exhibit of one hundred years of fashion will be on display at the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History in Lewiston from Thursday until February 24. The display is entitled, "The Way We Were: Clothing:"

Clothing that was worn by young women and children during the early years of the 19th century will be exhibited in the Center of Excellence. The items on display are from the Erwin's collection of Goodwin's Onions.

The exhibit traces fashion trends of the 18th century, as the fashion of the 18th century was for women to wear a full skirt and for men to wear a suit and hat.

The Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History is located at 415 Main in Lewiston. Local bands offer new music

If you are looking for an active night life this week, local bars offer a few possibilities.

US 95, featuring longtime local musicians Joe Patterson, offers country and rock-a-billy at Cadillac Jack's (112 N Main) Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights for the next three weeks. Ladies are admitted free on Thursday; regular cover is $2.

Across the street at the Capricorn (123 N Main), Mid-life Crisis will play classic rock on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Capricorn also has a Thursday ladies' night and $2 cover charge.

For a different twist, John's Alley (114 E 6th) has open mike tonight.

Original alternative music will be played Thursday by local band Royball and Friday by Black Curtail Jam. Cover for Thursday and Friday will be $3.

Possible protection for aquifer

Erik Marone

Editor's note: This is the first of a two part series focusing upon the possible impacts of designating the Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer as a sole source aquifer.

Two years ago the Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute petitioned the Environmental Protection Agency to designate the Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer System as a Sole Source Aquifer. In May of this year, their efforts may finally pay off.

Sole Source Aquifer, or SSA, is a protective status given to aquifers that meet certain criteria. If the aquifer is the primary source of drinking water for at least 50 percent of the population above the aquifer, people can petition the EPA to consider the aquifer a SSA. Once an aquifer has been designated as SSA, the EPA reviews all federally funded or subsidized programs that may affect ground water quality. Essentially it acts as a check for the government against itself. Federal programs that are found to endanger water quality will be modified to preserve the drinking water.

The Eastern Columbia Plateau Aquifer System (ECPAS) is a 9,000 square mile area in Eastern Washington and parts of Clark, Cowlitz and Klickitat counties in North Idaho. Approximately 90 percent of the over 400,000 people who live here rely on the aquifer for their drinking water, including the cities of Moscow, Pullman, Moses Lake and Pasco. The aquifer is composed of three major basalt deposits dating back to the Mesozoic epoch that make up part of the Yankska group of Columbia River Basalt.

Tom Lamir, executive director PCEI, submitted the SSA petition to the EPA in 1991. He sees SSA designation as much more than simply protecting our drinking water.

In his aquifer address at one of several hearings in the last year, he described SSA status as “a tool for working with project managers applying for federal dollars.” It is a way for the federal government to make sure that taxpayer's money is not being used to contaminate their own drinking water. Lamir says it would be a shame for citizens to have to pay twice, once to contaminate their water and again to clean it up.

Before the petition would be considered, the PCEI had to gather detailed information about the climate, population, land and water use, hydrology, geology, water quality, boundaries and other data as well as possible alternative water resources to demonstrate a need for SSA designation.

Many groups are waiting anxiously for the EPA’s decision that is expected in May. The past two years have been a veritable war between several groups. Some groups will be fighting until the last minute to see the aquifer gets protected, others will try to keep the federal government out of the picture.

Paradise Creek affords alternative route

Dave Lewis

Recent rains have ruined most winter outdoor activities, but made possible an unusual canoe trip.

Saturday morning joggers along Paradise Creek were surprised to see two interpid canoeists attempting to go where no man had gone before. They saw Assistant Professor Mike Kinziger and I on the first leg of our journey to Pullman by water.

The water gauge at Mountain View Park showed the level of Paradise Creek at six feet as we unloaded Mike's Blue Hole canoe and prepared to begin our float. It had been raining all night and for a while it looked as if our attempt would have to wait for another day. However, by 10 a.m. the rain stopped and we decided since we wouldn't mind if we got wet, we'd go for it.

I nonetheless wore my rain coat over a heavy flannel shirt and long wool underwear. Mike and I figured the creek was shallow enough in most places to wade, so I wasn't worried about being too heavy to swim. I was a little worried about what sane people would say when they saw two grown men paddling down what is usually a picturesque stream of water. I have an excuse—I'm a student. What Mike's excuse is I have no idea.

We had barely left the park, when we saw our first set of joggers coming up stream along a beautiful paved bike path. Not one of them laughed, but they all smiled the same commons to wives and mothers who see the "little boy" coming out of bushes and supposedly grown soon. I was relieved to hear one of them say, "I'm impressed." It was impressive to us.

‘Power words’ to arm your tall tales

Dave Claycomb
Rolled Martin seems to like it on TNN.

Another item to be used as often as possible is “controlled feed.”

Now I must confess that I do not know exactly what it means. I have gathered that it is associated with Winchester rifles. To the best of my knowledge a controlled feed is what happens when a local pizza place accidentally delivers an order to the set of Robert Simon’s “The Oldest.” However, this does not stop me from arbitrarily yelling “controlled feed” whenever some one mentions rifles. Many a hunter has laughed loud out loud at me to conceal their obvious envy at my vast understanding of the American firearm.

If you are a fly fisherman or have ever even thought about fly fishing, then you are in luck. Few outdoor activities offer the chance to use impressive words like fly fishing do.

A couple of the bread and butter words to be used are “weight forward” and “nymph.”

Now for many years I believed “weight forward” was the area that rested heavily on my belt line.

However, this is not the case. Although it’s exact meaning eludes me, I do know that it is associated with the flyline itself. As “nymph” implies, I once put that down as my answer for the name of the reproductive organ for anchoicks on a biology test. I’m sorry to say that I have no clue as to what it means and you should use it only in the case of an emergency.

Another couple of power words associated with fly fishing are “phantom-tailed nymph” and “strike indicator.” After having once sighted what I believed to be a “phantom-tailed nymph” at the end of the bar, I can assure you from a painful personal experience and a serious breach of etiquette that one should not be addressed as such. Instead, use “phantom-tailed nymph” whenever anyone is foolish enough to ask you what you’re tying. And so, a “strike indicator” is not what you need to pick up “phantom-tailed nymph.” It is my understanding that a strike indicator is somehow attached to the flyline to show when you get a bite.

Now that you have a few of my patented power words in your vocabulary, feel free to use them to your convenience. Whenever outdoors, what you catch or how big the animal you kill is irrelevant, most fisherman and hunters won’t believe anything you say anyway. So remember, it’s not really HOW you say it, but WHAT you say.

sized by willow branches. The many culverts and low bridges are exciting too.

Although we did have to make several portages around bridges too low to get under, we usually stayed on the water. It is quite a thrill to start into a culvert barely large enough for the canoe, lest alone its two occupants. We couldn’t be sure what we would find at the other end. I especially remember my feeling of dread, when upon entering our first culvert Mike warned, “Watch out for the barbed wire at the end.” In my mind’s eye I could suddenly see my face wrapped in bandages on my way to the plastic surgeon.

Anytime thinking of trying the trip to Pullman should keep wire fences in mind. There are several of them and all have the potential to rain your day if not your canoe.

Paradise Creek is a creature of the local weather. When it rains near Moscow it rises quickly and falls nearly as quickly when the rain stops. I was amazed at how low the water was Sunday. I believe the creek can not be run at a level much lower than six feet. Willow trees growing over the creek provided the most excitement for us. The gradient of Paradise Creek as it flows down to Moscow is quite flat. However, it drops as the creek nears Pullman. The willows in Moscow are not a real hazard because the current is slow. Towards Pullman the current is much faster so the willows pose a significant risk. I was glad to be with an expert paddler.

Kinziger has extensive experience in canoes, and taught me the basic strokes used in white water. They work well in water the color of chocolate milk too. The training I received on the relatively flat water in Moscow served well on the more dangerous rapids near Pullman.

I may have been complacent as we neared our take-out spot, and I should have heeded the words of the young boy standing on the bridge in Pullman. He was at least as cryptic as the banjo swinging hillbilly boy on the bridge in Deliverance. As we passed beneath the bridge heading toward yet another willow grove, he called down, “You ain’t going to need those... I didn’t quite hear him and we were soon among the willows anyway. Sideways.

Mike had cautioned me several times not to lean up stream, and when my coat became caught by a willow branch those words became his mantra and mine.

I couldn’t see which limb was holding us against the current, but I could see how close the water was to the gunwales of the canoe. When you are wet, cold and have old knees cramped into new and different positions filling a canoe with icy water doesn’t seem like the best idea.

Mike saying “Don’t lean up stream, don’t lean up stream!” began to take on real meaning for me when I noticed the water level was not quite so crazy with the gale we leaned down stream.

Before we had time to capsize, we maneuvered the canoe through the limbs and were soon pulling the boat out in Pullman. I had learned a big lesson. Always listen to experience.

I also learned where all those lost softballs go at Wick’s Field. They go down Paradise Creek. We saw dozens along our way.

Update on the Vandals scores

- The Vandals are a year down than up over the winter break. The road was not kind to the first five games during a quick rundown of results over the break.

  Dec. 21 New Mexico 76, Idaho 74
  Dec. 29 Idaho 63, Washington State 69, Idaho 84
  Dec. 30 Portland 74, Idaho 70
  Jan. 4 Oregon State 75, Idaho 65
  Jan. 9 Idaho 66, Southern Utah 72

The Idaho women's season has picked up the pace over the layoff. After opening season with nine straight losses the hooperettes have found their winning ways. The women's scores are as follows:

- Dec. 29: Vermont 86, UI 68
- Dec. 30: UI 71, Temple 59
- Jan. 2: UI 75, Cal-Poly 66
- Jan. 6: Southern Utah 72, UI 66

Intramural games begin Jan. 30

Intramural jumble had better gear up for the spring semester barrage and quick. The entry deadline for basketball is Jan. 24 and play is set to kick off Jan. 30.

The ski meet entry deadline is Jan. 25 with action taking place Jan. 28. The entry deadline for co-rec volleyball is Jan. 25 with play scheduled to begin Jan. 31. The recpetball singles tourney is set for Jan. 29 with entry forms due by Jan. 26.

Erickson to coach Seahawks

Former Idaho football coach Dennis Erickson was named Wednesday to take over as the head coach of the Seattle Seahawks.

Erickson, who coached the Vandals from 1982-1985, has been at the University of Miami in Coral Gables, Florida since 1989 when Jimmy Johnson left the perennial powerhouse to coach the Dallas Cowboys.

Erickson, who signed a four-year deal with a base salary of $400,000 per season, has been successful at every stop on his coaching career. The Evergreen, Wash. native got his first head coaching job at Idaho where he turned a losing program into a Div. I-AA winner, going 32-15 in his four-year tenure in Moscow.

Erickson has guided the Hurricanes to a 61-9 record and two national titles over the last six seasons.

Vandals sputter in second half

Ben Carr

If college basketball games lasted only 20 minutes the Vandals would have come out of the weekend a lot happier. The Vandals looked like seasoned veterans in first half action Friday and Saturday, but looked more like green roosters in second half play and the inaccuracy resulted in a pair of league opening losses.

Friday

Despite holding the Big Sky's second most prolific offense to only 19 points in first half, Idaho failed to capture a win Friday evening, losing to league rival Idaho State 69-59 in its Big Sky opener.

Idaho held Idaho State to just 7 of 32 shooting from the floor in the first half, but the senior scoring duo of Jim Potter and Donnell Morgan came on to combine for 27 points in the second half. Potter, ranked third in the Big Sky in scoring, was held to just 8 first-half points, but eventually finished with 21.

With their win over Idaho Friday and a 20-point triumph over Eastern Washington Saturday the Bengals improved to 11-2. ISU has received losses only on the road to Big 8 power Nebraska and Utah State of the Big West.

Idaho's loss was not without its own excellent performances. Junior forward Harry Harrison brought down 18 rebounds and scored 12 points. Harrison is ranked second in the Big Sky in rebounding, grabbing over 10 per game.

"It was the best first half we've played in a long time," Harrison said. "Defensively we didn't allow Potter and Morgan inside. We made the guards shoot the ball."

In the second half, Potter and Morgan scored over half of ISU's points.

Idaho guards Mark Leslie and Shawayne Dribben scored well from behind the 3-point line. Overall, Idaho shot 7-13 from 3-point land.

In the second half ISU looked like a different team, playing softer inside and improving their poor shooting from the first half. ISU made 8 of its 1st 10 shots in the second half and took the lead away from Idaho. Idaho would never retake the lead or get any closer than two points the rest of the way.

The Vandals were held without a basket for over four and a half minutes early in the second half. Harry Harrison buried a 12-foot baseline jumper to give the Vandals a 13-28 edge with 16:53 remaining.

No more Big Sky for UI

Mark Vanderwall

The University of Idaho finally ended its debate to stay in the Big Sky or play in the Big West last month. Through battles over attendance, and some public outcry, the University accepted the invitation with open arms, on Dec. 21.

After months of waffling over what to do, in the end the university could not pass up a chance to better itself by making the move to a Division I-A conference for football.

The rest of the Idaho's sports programs were already Div. I-A, so a chance for better overall competition was also a key.

"I believe today we are united in our resolve to make a positive move for the university," UI President Elisabeth Zinner said.

IDM will fold intramural rival Boise State, in the move to the Big West, as well as rekindle an old rivalry with Nevada, formerly of the Big Sky.

Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske said that the future looks much brighter for Vandals football, due to the fact that "we won't play your Sacramento States just to fill the schedule, we will be able to play some quality teams from the WAC (Western Athletic Conference), as well as maybe someday, renew the rivalry with Washington State."

The first issue to be attacked in order to make the move will be the attendance issue. The UI must average 17,000 fans for home games. That figure includes just tickets sold, not actual attendance.

"There is enough room in the dome as it is now, because general admission seats are often not sold by members," Liske said. People often take up two or three seats at a time, and this takes away from the actual density of the dome, Liske noted.

Idaho will enter the Big West in all sports, competing against Boise State, Utah State, Nevada, Pacific, New Mexico State, and North Texas in football, and adding Cal Poly, Cal State Fullerton, UC Irvine, UC Santa Barbara, and Long Beach State for all other sports. The Vandals will play six conference, and five non-conference games in football, as well as bump up it's conference schedule in other sports.

Div. I-AA football teams have a maximum of 63 scholarships they can offer whereas Div. I-A schools can use a maximum of 85.

When asked if this would hurt the program in it's first years, Liske said, "Nevada really hasn't changed their scholarships much, it's just a matter of the number of players it takes to get the job done."

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) plans to restructure in 1996, but this will have no bearing on the UI as it was once thought.

"The plans right now are to restructure by conference, and the Big West is a very viable player in this equation," Liske said. The Big West will stay a member of the NCAA, and have some say in what goes on everywhere else.

This could mean a great deal to programs other than football. UI's quickly rising volleyball program will step up its competition in the Big West schemes, facing national powers, Pacific, UC Santa Barbara, and Long Beach State twice a year.

Cagers fall on the road

By Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

After experiencing the comforts of home for nearly two weeks the Idaho Vandals were out of the school ready for the rigors of the road. The Vandals did not see the beauty of Pocatello and Boise over the weekend, dropping their Big Sky opener to Idaho State and Boise State in two women's basketball action.

A second half rally fell short against the Bengals, giving ISU the 76-69 triumph Friday. The Broncos showed no mercy Saturday pouring it on at both ends of the court in a 72-59 shellacking.

ISU's dynamic duo of Stacy Nelson and Holly Togai single-handedly put the Vandals away. Nelson pumped in a game-high 27 points and Togai added 21 points and nine rebounds.

After falling behind 10-2 in the early going, the Vandals found a rhythm in knot the score at 29-29 with just over six minutes remaining in the first half. Idaho State answered the Vandals with a 17-2 run to end the half. Nelson chipped in 10 points during the ISU run.

The Vandals did not fold up together a 17-7 run after the intermission to get within 57-52 at the 10:55 mark of the second half, but Boise could not get closer than five feet of the way.

Mindie Racy pieced the Vandals with 19 points and nine rebounds. The Broncos were much a tougher test for the Vandals.

ISU broke a 14-14 tie nine minutes into the game to take a 30-20 lead into the locker room at the half. The Broncos increased their lead to 17 at 39-22 before the Vandals started toaw away at the margin.

A pair of free throws by Ari Skorpik, who finished with 13 points, got the Vandals (2-2) within 43-34 with 12:27 left in the game, but Boise State shifted into another gear and the Vandals were never in contention again. The Broncos went on a 28-14 run to take their largest lead at 23 points eleven minutes later.
