When basketball Coach Joe Cravens got fed up with parking at the Kibbie Dome, he decided to park as close to his office as possible.

The group is unsure whether or not the lot will become a red sticker zone (offered to students) or a gold sticker zone (for professors only).

Rent for family housing may go up

UI housing officials submitted two proposals to the Housing and Dining Committee for approval before taking the rate plans to the Apartment Quality Committee which is composed of students from each area of family housing and University Residences officials.

One proposal asked for an eight percent hike in rates and would have provided funding necessary to take care of some deferred maintenance in family housing units, said Labine. The Apartment Quality Committee voted the proposal down and opted instead for a 6.4 percent average hike which further postpones the maintenance housing officials had hoped to take care of.

One family housing resident, Susan Hartill, said at last Thursday’s meeting she felt the lack of attendance was due to a feeling of anonymity on the part of the residents toward University Residences administration.

“We feel like we’re getting hit from all sides,” she said. Hikes in tuition and in other areas have contributed to the feeling of anonymity, Hartill said.

Officials discuss possible parking problem

A small, informal meeting Friday morning, three University of Idaho faculty who deal with parking issues made it clear that there are enough available parking spaces to accommodate UI’s demands.

“It’s a question of one’s perception. It ten minutes too long to walk to get where you need to be going?” said Jeffrey Eisenbarth, assistant financial vice president for Auxiliary Services. He feels that parking congestion is sometimes perceived as a parking problem.

“In total, do we have a parking problem at the university? Not really,” Eisenbarth said. He also thinks those who believe there are not enough parking spaces are not utilizing the outer lots. According to the parking services supervisor and Phillip Waite, Landscape Architects—the outer lots remain empty most of the time.

A recent topic of debate by some students was how the university was going to compensate for the lost parking it took away when construction of the new engineering buildings began. There were 105 spaces before the construction started.

Eisenbarth said that 1/3 of the lost spaces will be returned once the construction is finished. This should leave an estimated 30 lots.

Biscuits fights rabies outbreaks

Flavia plans drop 30,000 last-scented biscuits containing a coyote rabies vaccination, in an attempt to prevent one of the worst rabies outbreaks in modern United States history from spreading to major population centers in Texas.

Since 1988 a rare strain of canine rabies has been spreading from Mexico to about at 50 miles a year. Two South Texans have died, and more than 1,600 have received treatment for exposure to a virus that thought eradicated in the United States by vaccinations in the 1950s.

Student editor jailed over editorial in Cambodia

The editor of a Cambodian newspaper for college students was sentenced to a one-year prison sentence on charges of "inciting ethnic and defamatory" news.

The editor, a co-founder of the "Voice of Khmer Youth," published a cartoon and editorial critical of the nation's co-prime ministers, Ranarridh and Hun Sen. In the cartoon, Hu Sen stood armed with a sword behind Ranarridh; Ranarridh was pictured balancing a large bag of rice on his head. An accompanying editorial stated that_Ranarridh was acting "more stupid" than Hu Sen.

Ranotma was sentenced for violating Article 181 of the United Nations Administrative law, which calls for penalties for publishing "any news that is false, fabricated, faked or untruthfully attributed to a person," and was fined five million riels ($2,000).

Can American Affirmative Action Work in South Africa?

Pretoria, South Africa—In the past three years, the US Agency for International Development (AID) mission has quoted other and race-preference strategies to sharply increase the percentage of South African AIDS recipients. The program has been called "AID for HIV/AIDS workers," and the US AMS AID contractors who are African American.

The program, which gained many outside and the South African government, was launched in 1988 for the AID mission, which focuses on education, housing, and health care. It is argued that it applies to blacks who are often discriminated against and of the former white—minority government's apartheid system of racial separation.

But the program has drawn criticism from within and outside AID. Two disgruntled former employees of the AID mission have launched a public campaign to discredit it as a wasted and possibly illegal.

Critics argue that AID has used a policy of "affirmative action" to reverse an "overblown" image of sexual orientation and behavior in the African American community in the United States.

Bisexuals and lesbians in the military may vote toward the new policies, but the military also asked for a change in the "don't ask, don't tell" policy. In the military, it is possible to be gay and lesbian in the military.

Emeryville, Calif.—A tanker truck carrying a volatile liquid pounds of butane and liquefied petroleum gas exploded along a guard rail on a busy freeway killing the driver and injuring at least seven others.

The explosion tore the tanker truck into pieces and threw a huge ball of flame into the air, damaging the highway and roadway to the vehicle, according to a highway ramp above the interstate 80 interchange. A preliminary investigation showed that the driver may have been traveling below the speed limit and did not use a fire retardant.

Angela Armstrong speaks as a part of “100 years of Vardis Fisher” Monday. The program, put on by the students of English 473, honored Fisher for his life and over 40 novels and essays.

Michelle Kalbelitzer

Students in English 473, Literature of the American West, prepared and directed an honorary presentation yesterday for “100 years of Vardis Fisher.” Fisher is a celebrated Idaho author, and he was born 100 years ago on March 31, 1895.

The presentation offered a biographical sketch of Fisher’s life and career, reading excerpts of his works, as well as slides of the country where he grew up. Many of Fisher’s works provide a window to the West for those who do not live here. Some critics even agreed that his books were “written for the future generation” and not for those living in the present.

Some of Fisher’s most recognized books are Mountain Man and The Mothers; An American Saga of Courage.

He was raised Northeast of Idaho Falls, Idaho on the Snake River. After graduating high school in Rigby, Idaho, Fisher continued his education at the University of Utah and he received his A.B. in 1920. Fisher married in 1917, but his wife died later in 1924. He then went on to receive his M.A. in 1922 from the University of Chicago and his Ph.D. in 1924. Fisher was an independent man, and his second marriage ended in divorce after eleven years in 1930.

“Be faithful to their talent and skeptical to their judges,” Fisher said, when giving advice to aspiring writers.

The renowned author died, July 9, 1968 at Hagerman, Idaho. He had written over 40 novels and essays.

“Persons who laugh at themselves—and really mean it—never go insane and never get sidetracked by imagining themselves to be important in the sum of things,” Fisher said. “I hope I never lose that ballast.”

Cheri Reagan, a resident manager at Park Village Apartments, said she has not heard of any feelings of animosity among residents nor has she received any complaints from them about housing administration. “We thought the Apartment Quality Committee would help defuse discontent,” said Labine. “I think it’s been very successful. We’ve had good attendance at all the meetings.”

Any resident of family housing is welcome to the meetings which are held twice a month to give students a chance to voice their concerns about housing situations, said Labine. “Anyone who has concerns or ideas is welcome to attend,” he said.

Despite the proposed rate hikes, UI family housing residents still pay much less than their counterparts at Washington State University and Boise State University. Average prices for two- and three-bedroom apartments at both universities run as much as $50 to $60 more a month than units at UI.

Roger Oettil, director of University Residence Life, said the university has conducted extensive studies comparing prices of family housing units on campus to those out in Moscow. He said it’s important to remember that different apartments offer different amenities and to compare “apples to apples.” Still, Oettil said, UI offers housing that averages about $30 to 30 percent below the local area market and sometimes as much as 50 percent.

Housing officials said rate hikes were definitely “not set in stone” before the two meetings last week. They were hoping to seek student input regarding the rent increases. “We feel the rate increases are necessary to maintain quality,” said Stuart Davis, associate director of University Residences.

Labine said the waiting list for family housing often numbers in the hundreds and housing officials have had sidewalks upgraded, a parking lot resurfaced, apartments repainted and have installed 277 energy-efficient windows in family housing areas in the last year alone. According to the presentation by University Residences last Thursday, 20 percent of the rental income from family housing apartments is spent on administration, custodial and other areas while 18.5 percent goes towards maintenance and repairs, 10.6 percent is spent on utilities and 59.9 percent goes toward debt service.

“We don’t want people to move somewhere else because rent is going up,” said Labine, “but the increase is necessary to keep up operations and maintain facilities.”

Jim Bauer, director of Residence Life, said family housing offers many advantages over housing in the local area. In addition to being closer to campus and classes, University Residences offers community-based activities throughout the year, has a newsletter to keep residents informed and has a summer youth program for students who have children.

4 Decades of Quality Rock 'N Roll!
Students enjoy new scholars’ residence

The University of Idaho launched a new experiment in living and learning this fall, with the opening of The Sweet Avenue House: A Scholars’ Residence hall.

"A lot of things just fell into place," said Dan Zirk, director of the University Honors Program. It wasn’t any one push, but rather an idea kicked around for several years that finally enabled the birth of the Scholars’ Residence.

When University Housing acquired the old Kappa Alpha Theta sorority house, the opportunity opened up to push the idea through, and University Housing renovated the space for its new residents, Zirk said.

With a facelift that included new carpeting and furniture, a TV lounge and remodeled space for a computer lab and study rooms, the Scholars’ Residence became home to 46 students this fall. "We’re seeing the beginning of an exciting experiment," Zirk said. And a pilot project that, by all accounts, is working for everyone involved.

The residence hall maintains a strong affiliation with academic advising and the UI Honors Program, but residents are not required to be enrolled in the Honors Program. They must, however, maintain a 3.0 overall GPA to live here.

A donated baby grand piano graces the foyer and comfortable couches decorate the hone lounge just through the residence entry.

Just off the lounge is the dining hall and kitchen, domain of chef Benny Advincula, part of the Marriott food service team. He provides lunch and dinner to the residents weekdays, with the help of six students. And he’s providing a learning opportunity to residents in the food he serves.

Each Thursday night he serves a special ethnic dinner. "New things I am introducing to them," says Advincula. "Like tolto—a lot of them don’t know what that is before tonight..." He laughs. "But if they don’t like the food, they’ll tell you."

The residence hall is coeducational, with women and men separated by floors.

Two live-in resident assistants reside on each floor. Unique to the hall is the sleeping arrangement, with two sleeping porches on either end of each floor, separate from the living and study areas. All residents sleep in these rooms; each student shares a separate area with desks and closets with three or four other students.

Privacy is an issue, and the sleeping porch arrangement isn’t for everyone. "But people really seem to like it," said Molly Widdicombe, resident director for the Scholars’ Residence.

The building can accommodate 55 students, and she expects it will be full by next year. Residents observe extended quiet hours, starting at 9 p.m., along with an alcohol and tobacco free environment. Co-ed residents share lounge and study areas, and have laundry facilities and six donated computers in their building.

"I love it; it’s perfect," said Colleen Foster, a freshman honors student from Turner, Ore. "We’re all like one big family."

Freshman John Gallup, from Madras, Ore., echoed her sentiments. He likes the supportive atmosphere provided by the residence; "It works out really great, and we all get along," he said.

Most of the residents are freshmen this semester, but Widdicombe expects that mix to change over time.

A small office space is being renovated for Stephen Flores, associate director of the University Honors Program, so he can be available most days for advising students.

In addition, the Scholars Residence offers special events and activities designed to afford residents added exposure to cultural and musical events and more opportunities to interact with each other.

"It’s been a smash and a success, mostly because of the students," Zirk said. It looks like this is one pilot project that will fly just fine.
Republican education cuts could face presidential veto

Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—During a White House press conference with more than 100 college reporters, President Clinton vowed to use "the veto pen" to fight Congressional cuts to student aid.

While Clinton said his first choice "is to try and prevail in the debate in Congress," he criticized Republican proposals that seek to cut the number of students participating in the direct student loan program and to eliminate student loan subsidies while students are still in college.

Clinton told students at the March 23 press conference that "education is even more important to the general welfare of America than when I was your age," and that "I cannot sit by and watch it go backward."

"I wouldn't be standing here today, no way in the world would I be standing here today, if it hadn't been for the opportunities America gave me through education," said Clinton, who added that financial aid allowed him to finance his college education at Georgetown University and law school at Yale University. "My whole generation owes everything we have to the educational opportunities our country gave to us."

The president said he was ready to veto any legislation that decreased funding in "areas of education which are so important to me."

"I don't think there's as much enthusiasm in the Senate among Republicans (for cuts in education), and I don't know if the Democrats will oppose eliminating the subsidies, cutting the Pell Grants, eliminating the direct loan program," said Clinton. "So I hope we can prevail in Congress, but the veto pen is always there."

Like many college students, Clinton said he used a variety of financial resources to fund his education. "I had a $500-a-year scholarship and a job. I worked in Congress for two years," he said. "And when I went to Yale, I had a grant, a loan, and a tuition postpayment option. I had a national defense loan and six jobs, but never more than three at once."

Since winning control of Congress last November, Republicans legislators have targeted higher education programs as a way to cut $20 billion out of the federal budget over the next five years. The federal government.

College reporters converge on White House

Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—More than 100 college newspaper editors and reporters converged in Washington last week to listen to President Bill Clinton and members of his cabinet speak on issues in higher education.

And when College Media Day was over, many of the student journalists left with a new attitude, about either the Clinton White House or themselves.

"Reporters try their entire lives to cover the White House," said Margaret Sindelin, reporter for the student newspaper at Brigham Young University. "When you get a chance to do it when you're still in school, and do it successfully, you can't help but feel more confident about your future in journalism."

Sure, the D.C. trip provided the scoop-in-your-face experience with a great resume-padding line. But most college journalists said they were just happy to get the opportunity to meet the president.

"This is really exciting," said Elizabeth Weintraub, a reporter for the University of Colorado student newspaper."

Despite the weather Saturday: eighteen fraternities and one hall met on Guy Wick's field to raise money for one of Pi Beta Phi's philanthropies. The money, which goes towards the Arrowwood Settlement School, was raised by the entry fees and T-shirt sales of the event.

Participants of the day's activities competed for a trophy in events like tug-of-war, a pyramid race, pizza eating contest, obstacle course and the ever popular mystery event—a fish filing.

FarmHouse fraternity won, with an overall total for the day of one hundred points. Kappa Sigma fraternity came in second. In third place was Phi Delta Theta and Alpha Tau Omega. Fourth place was a four way tie with Beta Theta Pi, Lambda Chi Alpha, Sigma Chi and Sigma Phi Epsilon. Sigma Phi Epsilon is the newly organized fraternity on campus; they were assisted by Snow Hall.

Lori Konzmann, a member of Pi Beta Phi, was pleased with how smoothly the day went.

Mandy Horton said, "All of the guys seemed excited to participate, even though it was rainy."

"It was more fun than big," said Tal Rosander of Lambda Chi Alpha.

In preparation for Arrow Challenge, each fraternity was given a couple of Pi Beta Phi coaches to assist them through the event. Good preparation and assistance from the coaches paid off, especially for the winning team, FarmHouse. The men of FarmHouse fraternity came clad in cleats and gloves for the tug-of-war and had practiced extensively for the pyramid race as well as some of the other events. At the end of the day, most of the coaches were thanked heartily with a mess of whip cream or a "dunk in the jello."

One of the highlights of the event was the Sigma Nu wash tub. Pi Beta Phi had captured the tub and filled it with thirty-four gallons of jello. For the obstacle course each team had to retrieve an apple from the tub and pass it off on the obstacle course by mouth. Afterwards the Sigma Nu's were able to reclaim their abducted wash tub.

Megan Russell, philanthropy chair of Pi Beta Phi, said, "We're excited for next fall's Arrow Challenge and hoped that everybody had fun this year." The Pi Beta Phi's wish to extend a thank you to everybody that participated, and they promised that the weather would be better next year.

On the same cold and rainy Saturday Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity held their Olympics to raise money for their philanthropy, the American Cancer Society.

The SAE Olympics consisted of a volleyball tournament, tug-of-war, a 25-yard tennis ball pull, a boston toss, a leg pull, a leg race, wheel barrow race and a pie eating contest. Eight sororities participated, of which Kappa Kappa Gamma came in first and Delta Gamma second. The SAE's want to thank everybody for participating. Participants of the SAE Olympics stated that they enjoyed the event regardless of the weather.

All of the games this weekend were just the warm up for the big Greek event of the year—Greek Week.

Students take part in national forum

University of Idaho students will participate in a national Campus Forum on Tourism tomorrow. Using a five satellite link from Room 25 in UI's College of Forestry Building, the students will be linked to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in Washington, D.C.

Greg Farmer, Under Secretary of Commerce for Travel and Tourism, and a panel of tourism professionals will discuss issues facing the industry. The forum precedes White House Conference on Travel and Tourism for the first time.

About 60,000 students across the nation are expected to participate, according to information from the American Hotel and Motel Association.

The travel and tourism industry is the nation's third largest retail industry. The industry creates nearly 6.2 million jobs for Americans, with a $102.9 billion annual payroll.

The professionals on the panel are all graduates of travel, tourism and hospitality-related degree programs. The conference is sponsored by the American Hotel and Motel Association and the Council on Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional Management.

Gunmen fire on Pakistani crowds

Los Angeles Times

Karachi, Pakistan—Twenty-one people are dead following the apparent retaliation by a rival Muslim group.

Gunmen with automatic weapons fired on two Sunni Muslim crowds Sunday, killing at least 21 people and wounding at least 25 in Pakistan’s bloodiest days in recent years. Police said they suspected Shiite Muslims carried out Sunday’s attacks in retaliation for a series of Saturday night shootings in Karachi that left 12 men dead, most of them Shiite.

ing editor for the student newspaper at the College of Charleston in South Carolina.

"There are important issues that we’re talking about, and it gives students a good chance to ask questions about the details. We get to find out who’s for us and who’s against us.”

After passing through security clearance at the Old Executive Building’s entrance, students began their day with question-and-answer sessions with Secretary of Education Richard Riley and Deputy Secretary Madeline Kinlin; Rick Arum, Chief Executive Officer for National Service; Secretary of Labor Robert Reich; and Attorney General Janet Reno.

After a presentation on the White House’s Internet project, the student journalists were hurried into the Indian Treaty Room, where they were treated to a standing-room-only, sandwich-and-potato chip lunch. "I thought they’d give us a little more than this,” said Andy Curtiss, editor of the University of Toledo Collegian, while surveying the luncheon table. "But I’m not complaining, I’m happy to be here.”

Students then headed across the street to the White House, where they passed through security once again before being seated in the East Room in preparation for Clinton’s arrival.

Michael McCurry, White House press secretary, said college reporters were invited to Washington to give them a chance to hear a clearer summary of the Clinton agenda.

"A lot of younger voters are drifting on politics. They’re tuning out some of the debates they’re hearing in Washington,” said McCurry. "So it’s not that they’re apolitical, they’re just not political. It’s just that they’re nonpartisan. They’re less willing to latch onto the values of the president and stay with him. If their issues aren’t being addressed, or they hear something they don’t agree with, they tune out.”

During the press conference, Clinton singled out only a few journalists for questions from what was a sea of raised hands. Jim Buchan, a reporter for the student paper at St. Louis Community College, was one of them. He asked Clinton about health care reform.

"I was trying to focus on a question that meant the most to our students,” Buchan said. "Since we have a lot of adult students, health care is an issue that most of us are concerned with.”

Chad Leach, news editor for the Ohio State Lantern, said the day of interviews was more than he expected. "I didn’t know if they would stick us in a room with a pre-recorded messages or what,” Leach said. "But this was pretty official. It gives us a chance to ask questions that usually don’t get asked.”

Erik Galloway, news editor of the University of South Carolina Gamecock, said he heard about the College Media Day only a day before the event. Since the newspaper staff already had spent their travel budget on conferences earlier in the year, Galloway and sports editor Ryan Wilson decided to pay for the trip with their own money.

Was it worth it? Definitely, said Galloway.

"We’re getting a chance to hear about programs and cuts that relate directly to our own institution,” said Galloway, who completed the eight-hour drive from Charleston earlier that morning. "Besides, how many chances do you get to go to the White House?”

The University of Idaho has found a new way to save money.

UI has signed a one-year contract with Northwest Airlines to provide university travelers with discounts on some of the most costly domestic tickets.

The discounts will apply to regular coach tickets which require no advance purchase, no Saturday stay-over, and any changeable and refundable without a penalty.

The contract, which became effective Saturday, provides a 20 percent discount on regular coach fares to all points in the United States, a 10 percent discount on flights to Canada, and a 5 percent reduction on the price of flights to Northwest hubs in Denver, Minneapolis and Milwaukee.

Tom Lankeman, manager of UI Travel Management Services, said the discounts could be beneficial for job candidate interviews, guest speakers, and for those attending one-day, one-night meetings that might take place on the university’s campus.

Our goal is to get people to analyze their travel expenses,” Lankeman said in a prepared statement, noting that when the cost of hotel accommodations, car rental and per diem are considered in addition to airfare, overall savings may result from booking a flight at the newly discounted fares and traveling for fewer days.

In addition to reducing travel expenses, employees would have less time taken away from their jobs and families. In 1994, Northwest Airlines was UI’s most frequently used air carrier for flights outside of Idaho.

It all comes down to saving money.

Presents for the holidays, a new job, a car or whatever, finding the right gift for our loved ones is the goal of many people. Gift shopping can be a stressful task. Waiting in line, looking for parking, and trying to find a parking spot can be a hassle. That’s why parking is so important at the University of Idaho.

The contract, which became effective Saturday, provides a 20 percent discount on regular coach fares to all points in the United States, a 10 percent discount on flights to Canada, and a 5 percent reduction on the price of flights to Northwest hubs in Denver, Minneapolis and Milwaukee.

Tom Lankeman, manager of UI Travel Management Services, said the discounts could be beneficial for job candidate interviews, guest speakers, and for those attending one-day, one-night meetings that might take place on the university’s campus.

Our goal is to get people to analyze their travel expenses,” Lankeman said in a prepared statement, noting that when the cost of hotel accommodations, car rental and per diem are considered in addition to airfare, overall savings may result from booking a flight at the newly discounted fares and traveling for fewer days.

In addition to reducing travel expenses, employees would have less time taken away from their jobs and families. In 1994, Northwest Airlines was UI’s most frequently used air carrier for flights outside of Idaho.

Pow Wow unites Native Americans

Dancers from various age groups participated in the Native American Pow Wow held last weekend at WSU.

A rich and proud heritage highlights Pow Wow

The Native American Pow Wow held last weekend at Washington State University was not burdened by rhythm or energy. The pulse of the drum and the unnerving intensity of the dancer's movements would have any spectator in fascination of Native American culture and the Pow Wow itself.

Many Native American members from the University of Idaho participated in the event. Among them was Sarah Penney, UI Coordinator for Multicultural Student Services. Penney, who just returned from performing in Belgium for the embassy, competed in the Women's Fancy Dress division of the Pow Wow. Her costume was the "Jingle Dress," an attire made with 365 Copenhagen Sid, each one representing a day of the year.

"It is a very heavy dress," says Penney. Not only does Penney have to concentrate on keeping with the beat of the drum and watching her footwork carefully, she has to make sure nothing falls off the costume. If something drops, it is recommended that the dancer disqualify herself.

Penney explains that if an eagle feather falls from a costume at any point in the dance, a special course of events takes place to respectfully preserve the feather's honor.

The Pow Wow began with the Grand Entry which includes a tribe's native and elder members and a bearing of tribal, state, and national flags as well as the singing of the Native American National Anthem. The Pow Wow never fails to honor special members such as veterans and alumni.

Pride and dignity are shown with every drum beat, footstep, and chant.

The two-day event also included raffle drawings, Native-American arts exhibitions, and tables of handmade Indian crafts for sale.

Dancers from all around competed in the Pow-Wow-Par celebration in such divisions as Men's Traditional Dress, Women's Shawl and Golden Age. The diversity of dancers ranged of every imaginable age, wearing such costumes as intricately beaded accessory-laden traditional wear to the elaborate costumes full of color and feather for the fancy dress.

Different tribes vary in their modes of dancing but two characteristics always remain present, dramatic action and rhythmic precision.

Every dance also has meaning. The dancers had a remarkable sense of expression and rhythm as their bodies became tools of story telling and motion.

The drummers and singers, too, sang and pounded with unwavering intensity as they kept time.

The Native American Pow Wow is full of a proud symbolism and a rich culture that leaves any spectator in fascination of the people within it.
Turning 21 in Singapore

This is my personal story about how I got to know Singapore, and the comparison between the effort of the Singaporean government in finding success through looking outward and becoming cross-cultured, and my increased awareness as I grow up that this is the way I can succeed.

I would like to express my appreciation to my American studies professor, Walter Hasford, and my Civil Engineering professor, James Hardcastle, for helping and providing me some valuable suggestions to make this article more interesting.

My grandma used to tell me her stories when I was a little kid. She told me almost everything in her life started from the time she was in China until her voyage to Singapore, followed by the migration to the northeast corner of the Peninsular Malaysia.

Occasionally, I felt bored because she kept repeating what she had already said to me. I always wanted to tell her to stop telling the stories she had told me and I thought she was too old to tell me interesting stories; but, my parents never allowed me to do so. My parents often wanted me to stick with my grandma, as they thought that since she was sixty years older than me, her personal experience over that long period of time would definitely be very useful to my life in the future. I never agreed, however, with what my parents said.

International Column

—Wei Lien Lian

Among the stories she told me was her first arrival in Singapore almost six decades ago and her experience in her new home there, p.m. She told me how wonderful and successful Singapore was in the old days. She also said how happy her life was in Singapore because she did not need to struggle as much as she did back in China, and her family and herself had sufficient food to eat, enough clothes to wear, and a decent place to live. These stories still remain vivid to me today, perhaps because she told me the same story over and over again.

Before I was even enrolled in an elementary school, I often urged my parents to bring me to Singapore. I was told by others that Singapore was a really big city, and it was even bigger than the capital of Malaysia—Kuala Lumpur. As a poor kid growing up in a small town, I always wanted to see and know what it was like to be a big city. My first trip to Singapore was when I was 9, I went there with my mom to attend my eldest sister's wedding ceremony.

That was my first time stepping out of Malaysia and the first visit to a modern city. I had never seen so many high-rise buildings before, and it was my first visit to a place with so many people. That was also the first time I attended a wedding ceremony in a Christian church.

Although Singapore consists of 76% of ethnic Chinese, 1 5% of Malay, and 6% of Indian, the national language is English. As a 9-year-old kid, sometimes I had little trouble communicating there as I did not even know a word of English. Occasionally I was confused by the fact that the vast majority of the people there had adapted to the western language, religion, and lifestyle.

I could not understand why they had learned so much from the white culture that totally contradicted our Chinese values. I perceived them as a group of humiliated people who had forgotten their roots. Overall, however, I was very excited and had a lot of fun at this new place.

Last summer, I again visited Singapore after two years of college education in the United States. This country still remains so clean and safe, and it still has plenty of jobs. The unemployment rate is almost zero. When I was a kid, I could never comprehend how this is.

GSA teaching excellence awards

The Teaching Excellence Award Committee of the Graduate Student Association is pleased to announce the recipients of Teaching Excellence Awards for 1995. They are:

Department of Art: Richard Briggs and Timothy Gattis
Department of Economics: Chi-Mai Chol
Department of English: Greg Matthews and Molly Mag
Department of Geography: Gregory Halle
Department of Math/Statistics: Katherine Johnson and Dusty Sabo
Department of Resource Recreation and Tourism: Jose Courrue

A letter of nomination from the department and a letter of support from a second person of the nominee’s choice were required to complete each entry.

“Those letters addressed the following selection criteria: 1) amount and variety of teaching experience; 2) clarity of communication; 3) academic quality and fairness; 4) enthusiasm; 5) ability to motivate students; and 6) creativity and innovation.”

Teaching Excellence Award Committee members then read each letter, making recommendations for awards based upon criteria being met.

A total of seventeen awards are possible each year.

Award winners will be honored on Friday, April 7 at the GSA Awards Banquet. Each will receive a $100 check from GSA.

The English and Math/Statistics departments have agreed to provide an additional $50 to each of their Teaching Excellence Award recipients.

Students learned of Vandal Friday through higher education day held at their schools in fall. Hansen said that Greek housing also sent out notification to prospective students.

Friday’s schedule of events included three separate 20-minute lectures from Alice Barbo from the UI’s Cooperative Education Department, Dan Blasco from Career Services and Harriet Rojas from Campus Financial Aid.

Following the speakers students and their families were given a general tour of the campus, lunch at the Wallace student center, and a social advising and pre-registration with the school of the student’s choice.

Students were allowed to choose between staying at residence halls or a fraternity or sorority.

Hanson said that he was pleased with the turnout and that the only drawback was getting everything organized at first.

“We had a long line of people this morning,” Hanson said of the early morning events. “At any rate I felt bad that people were waiting, but the program is working well.”

“I’m happy that the campus community at UI got behind this the way they did,” Hanson said. “Everyone has been extremely cooperative as we put this together.”

Saturday’s events included breakfast and an activities fair at the student union building for students white parents attended a breakfast including a visit from Dean Bruce Prices.

ASUI final comedy series for semester

Jeremy Chase

Sure

Unless you wait for next fall, tonight is the last chance to catch the final installation of the ASUI comedy series. Tonight, featuring Brad Upton and Kermit Holiday, will be held in the Student Union at 7:30 p.m. and is free to University of Idaho students.

As tonight’s headlining act, Brad Upton comes to the UI having logged over 2,200 shows in 28 states and four provinces. From Seattle, Upton has been featured on the Arts and Entertainment Network’s “An Evening at the Improv,” “Comedy on the Road,” MTV’s “Half-Hour Comedy Hour,” and Showtime’s “Comedy Club Network.”

Upton has also appeared as an opening act for Kenny Rogers, Dolly Parton, and K.T. Oslin. As other notable events in Upton’s career, he has written for Sports Illustrated and is currently working at the University of Washington as an assistant track coach.

Kermit Holiday, tonight’s opening act, is from Tacoma and brings experience that has covered the Northwest, Midwest, and Canada. He has appeared at the Improvisation program and Comedy West, both from Seattle, and the Comedy Factory at Edmonton, Alberta. Holiday is also, as his photos and press releases illustrate, the world’s “Almost comic.”

Jenny Moore, speakers and performers arts chair for ASUI Productions, said that tonight’s show will be the last of its kind to be hosted. “We’re getting away from smaller stuff,” she said.

“It doesn’t seem to be catching on well with students,”

“With this change, however, Moore said that comedy isn’t necessarily gone at the UI. Working with the ASUI Programs Board, Moore said that student turn out will be able to see larger scale events to include comedy in the future. Next year’s programs will also show more well-known entertainers.

With these considerations, Moore said that two shows for next fall are already scheduled.

Craig Karges, a psychic-comic-dimension-traveler, will be here to kick the academic year off in early September. Karges was voted NACA (National Association of Campus Activities) Entertainer of the Year for 1994. The other show will feature Barry Williams, star of “The Brady Bunch.”

In November, for a change from the other comedy series shown this year, there will be some differences for tonight’s event. The first, Moore said, is that it will be free. “We just decided that students would take advantage of it if it was free,” she said.

Moore also said that this will be the second show held in the Vandal Lounge, due to the favorable response received from the last show. “We’ve decided to keep it in the Vandal Lounge because it went well there,” she said.

Anyone with questions about tonight’s show or next year’s programs can contact Jenny Moore at 885-6485. The ASUI Productions office is located in the Student Union basement.

small island country with the area of 246 square miles and the population of 3 million without any natural resources could achieve such a high level of economic success.

Growing up plus two years of my own cross-culture experience in the United States has taught me that turning inward will not bring me any good but will prove to be disastrous.

Only through interacting and exchanging ideas with others will I enhance my personal knowledge. Thus, I begin to understand the benefit to Singapore of bringing in foreign investments, technologies, language, philosophies, and values. But the government's effort alone is certainly not sufficient to accomplish such a high level of economic success in Singapore. The contribution from the average citizens has played a very important role in this drama.

Mad Season

With a familiar sting and flavor Mad Season debuts its latest release: Above. Above is the spawn of the minds of Layne Staley, vocals and guitar, from Alice in Chains, Mike McCready, electric and acoustic guitar, from Pearl Jam, Barrett Martin, drums, from Screaming Trees and bassist John Baker Saunders a new prince to the scene.

Above is filled with 10 tracks and sounds like a hybrid Alice In Chains.

There are points on the album when Staley and Mark Lanegan the vocalist for the Screaming Trees join together on two of the tracks, "I'm Above" and "Long Gone Day."

The first song off the CD, "Wake Up," is a very mellow song that brings back memories of Alice In Chains.

Through the majority of the disc a wide range of music is explored. On some tracks the song will sound like it has a list of blues to

Carr heads for the big time

Ben Carr

Recently, I had to call my dad and give him some bad news.

"Dad," I said in the most soothing voice possible, "It doesn't look like I'm going to graduate in May like I planned."

After several minutes of gasping and wheezing from the other end of the line, I broke the silence of the phone and put my father's images of a wasted retirement fund on hold.

"Hey Dad, don't worry, by next year I'll be a multi-millionaire."

I know that you are currently finding my lack of ambition and my drab outlook on life extremely irritating. But I assure you that I am quite serious. Of course, the path I've chosen isn't as easy as it looks. I haven't played a minute of college (or high school for that matter) basketball, but I can assure you that I have very few nights left on the nose floor courts in the past five years.

I'll have to be back to school this fall, because I'm sure that you will think it's the right thing to do. You see, this spring, I'm declaring myself eligible for the NBA draft.

I know, this might come as a shock to those of you who don't know me, but I assure you that I am quite serious. Of course, the path I've chosen isn't as easy as it looks. I haven't played a minute of college (or high school for that matter) basketball, but I can assure you that I have very few nights left on the nose floor courts in the past five years.

Up until that weekend I didn't think I was going to do it, but I've finally made up my mind.

Since North Carolina didn't do as well as I thought they would in the good bowl, I can count on Jerry Stackhouse and Rasheed Wallace to not eat the draft this spring, thus increasing my chances of a high selection. That, plus the threatening cloud of a rookie salary cap, served as a good enough incentive for me to enter the land of giant and hard wood floors.

I know that you are probably not doing the do of the third, I'm at least a second pick for a team in need of some help. I can see now that coach David Stern will be at the podium on ESPN, and in his high pitched somebody-like-me voice he will pick me up near the end of the first round, the Los Angeles Clippers select Ben Carr, senior from the University of Idaho the crowd will fall silent as they look through their programs to find the fifth year senior position from the Gem State.

A couple of months later I'm playing alongside the Joirdans, Shaq, and Poohs of the big leagues. And let's not forget I'm playing in more dough than Birdy Crocker.

Of course, I think it's fair for me to warn everyone that basketball is not going to be my focus for major league sports. We've all seen other two sport athletes like Bo Jackson and Deion Sanders at work. Their exploits made everyone gape in wonder. I cut Deion and Bo for breakfast.

I'm going to use my NBA hoop season as a hoops season to throw a hoop in myself in the shape of the NFL season. I was going to try to focus my talents on basketball, but I read that the Washington Redskins might trade up to get the first pick in the draft from Carolina out of four. And I just don't want to be the guy who's found to be declare myself eligible for the NFL draft as well.

New coach to stress fundamentals

Damon Barkdull

Spring is in the air. Birds are chirping, students are dressing lighter and new University of Idaho football coach Chris Tomey is preparing his Vandals squad for the spring drills.

Spring drills officially start today and Tomey is looking to improve his players on an individual basis.

"We want to improve each player fundamentally, so fundamental improvement by position is the number one goal," Tomey said. "We want to identify the top 11 players on each side of the ball.

Along with improving the team on both the offensive and defensive side, Tomey will look to improve his special teams. In recent issues of the Argonaut, an ad has been issued asking for kickers and punters who think they are good enough to make the team.

"We want to improve our kicking game, and we need to find a punter. We need to develop a long snapper along with developing guys for kick off and kick return," Tomey said.

Annual spring drills kick off today

Sophomore Brian Brennan (left) and senior Eric Hilaw (right) are expected to fight for Idaho's starting quarterback job. Hilaw will be limited due to a knee injury and likely will not be back to full strength until fall practices begin later this year.

Jeff Curtis

Tomey

Although Tomey is looking for a few good men, he already has an idea of what guys he will look to on the defensive side of the ball.

"Defensively we return a very strong front four. Rayas Phillips and Barry Mitchell should be big-play players for us. Montrell Williams will be back for us in the secondary. Jason Shell won't be taking part in spring drills-he's recovering from a knee injury, and we're looking for big things from him when he gets back next fall," Tomey said.

Again, the strength of the Vandals offense will be up front on the line as the Vandals return 4 of 5 starters from last season. At the skilled positions running back Josh Blume returns along with receiver Dwight McKenzie should add some offensive support for whoever starts at quarterback.

At quarterback the Vandals return and on starters from last season Eric Hilaw and Brian Brennan, and although Tomey fell short of saying that there may be a quarterback controversy, look for stiff competition between the two pigskin throwers.

"We've got three real good quarterback prospects and Derrick Pope the new recruit. Spring drills will sort out the competition. Eric Hilaw won't be able to compete in spring drills because of a knee injury, but he should be able to recover. We'll make a final decision at quarterback at the end of fall camp, but even then the position is still open," Tomey said.

Along with recruiting Derrick Pope from Post Falls High at quarterback, the Vandals found many other recruits that coaches hope will help them out in seasons to come.

"We've had to broaden our recruiting base. The guys who have a chance to come in and play early is wide receiver Vidal Montgomery from Contra Costa College and a defensive back in Antoine Chambers from Mesa College. These guys should give us a little more depth at those positions," Tomey said.

Even with all the new changes within the football program here at Idaho things will still remain the same as far as the offensive and defensive sides go.

"Our philosophy at the University of Washington was similar to what it has been here. We'll run both a one back and two back offense. As far as our defense goes, we won't change much. We'll stay with an attack style pressure defense which is designed to put a lot of pressure on the quarterbacks," Tomey said.

Over the past few months Tomey has had a change to mold together with his assistant coaches, and notes that being a head coach has its distinguishable responsibilities.

"We've had a chance to get to know each other, but there are still adjustments to be made. Being a head coach is something I've been preparing for a long time. You have to be more of a planner and an organizer," Tomey said.

After the spring drills are completed, Tomey has to make sure that his players are active in the weight room over the summer. They're trying to recruit motivated players who will work hard during the summer. We've made good gains in group preparation this year and it's hard during the summer because we don't have group workouts. Summer training is the next phase of preparation and each phase is more important than the previous one," Tomey said.

Currently the UI Vandals football team is undefeated on the season, and it all starts with their spring drills and practicing until perfection.

Golfers finish 15th in tough Hawaii field

A first-place finish at the Idaho Women's Golf Invitational last week, the Vandals traveled across the Pacific hoping to continue their success at the Tenth Annual Rainbow Wahine Invitational in Honolulu, Hawaii. This year, 19 teams competed in the tournament including the likes of Georgia, Nebraska, Miami and nationally ranked Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, Idaho finished 15th with a 54 hole total of 1037, finishing just behind Big Sky Conference foe Montana State who finished with a total of 1017. The Georgia Bulldogs went on to capture the team title with a score of 911.

Jenny Tesch was the highest Idaho finisher during the tournament with a three-round total of 252, including a score of 79 on Friday. Dawn Hagshaw, who finished fourth in Lewiston last season, finished with a score of 258.

The women's golf team will now begin making preparations for the San Francisco Invitational on April 19-20.

Tennis

The University of Idaho tennis team rolled over the Gonzaga Bulldogs last Wednesday in the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals men swept through the Bulldogs without dropping a set, while the women won eight of nine matches, all in straight sets.

Mark Hudley led the way for the men with a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Matt Olmstead at No. 1 singles. Hudley then teamed with Niren Lall at No. 1 doubles 6-0, 6-1. The Vandals men are now 10-7 on the year.

Owen Nikison topped Gonzaga's Heather Tonnick 6-0, 6-0 at the women's No. 1 singles spot and then paired with Shelly Densler to win at No. 1 doubles 6-0, 6-1.

The women's team evened their record at 10-10. The Vandals women's tennis team will take the court on April 15 at Washington State, while the men will take a week off and get set to travel to Oplea Uah, for the Weber State Invitational on April 14-15.

Wimer throws off competition to pace UI tracksters

Dan Eckles
Sports Editor

The cold damp conditions of the Cougar Invitational didn't stop the Idaho Vandal track team from catching fire Saturday. Junior Jill Wimer came up big, capturing three first-place finishes and qualifying for the Big Sky Outdoor Championships in all three events. The Grangeville, Idaho native blew away the competition in the throwing events by winning in the shot put, discus and javelin.

Wimer’s throw of 44-feet 2-inches in the shot put was more than three feet further than Washington State’s Kim Hulse, who finished second. Wimer thumped in the discus with a toss of 142-11, beating Hulse’s second place effort of 137-02. Idaho’s Jessica Wells finished third at 132-8, a mark good enough to earn her a trip to the BSC championships as well. Wimer’s javelin mark of 147-0 was good enough to beat out teammate Beth Hopkins, who grabbed second with a 143-6 throw. Jessica Puckett nearly made it a top three sweep in the event, finishing fourth with a throw of 132-3. The trio along with Lori Thompson, who threw the javelin 135-0 on March 18, will all make the trek to the outdoor postseason meet next month.

Angie Mathison and Shelley Zicker finished second and third respectively in the 3,000 meter run for the Vandals. The duo ran times of 10:18.1 and 10:18.2 to become the only other Vandal women qualified for postseason action.

On the men’s side of the action Idaho runners should have worn CAUTION FLAMMABLE signs in the 200m race. UI’s feet-booted triumvirate of Nels Krueller, Jordan St. Hill and Felix Kamangiria swept the top three spots. Krueller won the event with a time of 21.44 seconds while St. Hill and Kamangiria snagged times of 21.64 seconds. All three marks were good enough to propel the trio into the BSC championships.

“We moved some people around and had some make-up running events, but considering the weather we had some pretty good marks, Idaho mens’ coach Mike Keller said.

Kamangiria and Krueller finished third and fourth in the 100 meters’ tough field with a times of 10.84 seconds. Those marks were also good enough for postseason berths. Idaho’s Todd Hay vaulted 6-7 in the high jump for a fourth place finish, which earned him a postseason berth.

The final Vandal to earn a postseason berth Saturday was Kyle Daley. Daley thrusted the hammer 169-0 to finish in second place behind Washington State’s Jason Baskett, who won the event with a toss of 181-10.

“We are ahead of last year and the year before at this point so we don’t have a lot of pressure on us to get people in (to the BSC championships). We just want to improve our marks,” Keller said.

On a down note sophomore Oscar Duncan will have to red-shirt this season after deciding to have surgery for a torn meniscus. Duncan, who had already qualified for the postseason meet in the javelin, will have surgery Friday and will be lost for the remainder of the season.

I must admit that I'm a little light right now to be playing with the likes of Reggie White and Michael Dean Perry. At 6-4, 185 pounds, I'm at a pretty good strong safety size, but I'm hoping to bulk up to about 6-4, 245 for my first training camp so I can play outside linebacker.

I also have to admit that my 40 yard dash time isn't quite up to par with some of the other players being selected. For instance, Carter runs the 40 in 4.49 seconds. But one thing I will say for sure. If you put a case of beer and a plate of hot wings at the finish, I'd beat Carl Lewis to the line.

I suppose I'm also lucky that the baseball strike is finally over. I really didn't want to play with the replacement players; that would be like Babylons dancing disco, or Rosa Perot selling Amway, or, well—you get the picture.

Now it's possible for me to become one of the boys of summer, a Mr. October, a member of the 50-50 club. Again, I think it's important to be realistic about what my chances really are. I don't think I'll be able to start in the majors right away, it takes everyone some time to adjust to the pressures of the big game, but I think a week or two should be sufficient.

By that time I will have adapted enough from intramural softball to major league baseball to make a contribution to any team I'm a part of.

Oh, and be sure to watch out for my rap album: M.C. H.E.R. Loco Gringo, coming out soon.

Oh, what the hell, maybe I'll just graduate instead.

Jam fest deadline extended

Nasa Race Ola, in conjunction with Washington Water Power and West One Bank, is sponsoring a three-on-three basketball tournament. The tournament kicks off Saturday April 8, and the entry deadline has been extended to then as well.

Play begins at 9 a.m. in Memorial Gym Saturday. The entry fee is $40 a team. Those interested in signing up a team should do so in UCC Room 228 this week.

Vanderwall does Lettermen

Mark Vanderwall

Being the longest hitter as well as the most controversial player on the PGA Tour has finally taken its toll on John Daly. He went from no-name to name star, and back to no-name faster than a rabbit producing offspring.

This has aroused my curiosity as well as my creativity to produce my first top ten things that you won't see John Daly doing on camera.

1. You won't see John Daly without a cigarette in his hands. He and Willis have combined heads to produce a fireproof golf glove for that avid smoker/golfer who has added a cigarette between the crookgrip for added nicotine satisfaction.

2. When the camera was on those Michelle commercials, John Daly was practicing for his big time wrestling debut with one of those precarious fans. It is also rumored that he and Lawrence Taylor will take on the British Bulldogs at Spring Fling '95.

8. You won't see John Daly with one of those hats that has a can holder for beer on each side, because if you haven't heard yet, he's a beer drinker and beer is for winos, not to mention the fact that he has supposedly quit the bottle altogether.

7. If you are standing on the tee box, you won't hear any comments about other people's golf games, because Daly isn't exactly the most consistent duck on the course.

6. You won't hear John Daly ever off of the tee box, because anything comes in less than a six-pack isn't worth drinking. (Besides that, four bottles of beer on the wall mean the song is almost over, and if you haven't heard, Daly is quite the singer as well.)

4. As for women, well, he doesn't exactly have time for them between AA, golf, before dinner drink, during dinner drink, and after dinner drink, not to mention the pack of Camels in between.

4. You won't see flashbacks of John Daly walking off of the course early, due to what most would call a hangover, but what he would call a bad putting day. He has since decided that he will finish the full round, so that his hanging out count will not fluctuate from walking less than 18 holes.

3. If he is on the ninth hole, and he hears his belly rumble, you won't see Daly reach for that sub-marine sandwich, instead he will wait for his scheduled lunch time so that his brain works the same every day, and a easily followed pattern begins to form.

2. You won't hear John Daly bragging about his driving distance, because he has the last D.U.I. all of his driving privileges have been lifted for the 1993 season. (By the way, his short game isn't anything to brag about in the club-house locker room either.)

1. The number one thing you won't see John Daly doing while the camera are on is playing golf. He has temporarily decided that when he plays, he will purposely miss the cuts so that he has an extra two days to visit new bars and try different cigarettes. With the problems he has had in the past, and the way his year is going now, don't expect to see a clean-cut, clear eyed John Daly on a golf course near you any time soon.

If John Daly can continue to make the limelight living the lifestyle he does, I'll pay him back. His golf game is so bad right now, that he couldn't play in the top 10 on the LPGA Tour. I, being a golfer with a good time living the life he is living, say up front that if he ever does, he is going to end up like Darryl Strawberry, a man that has no idea how to hit a ball, and a man that can't control the bottle.

A look back at the dance

Dan Eickes

Call me a psychic, a pro or just full of it and extremely lucky, but the Big E Kid, all 5-foot 6-inch of me, came out of March Madness smelling like a rose.

Arkansas, despite some games too close for comfort, went all the way to the title game before falling to a UCLA club on a mission. I must however say thank you to Syracuse's Lance Jackson for his imitation of Chris Webber in round two.

The folks in Fayetteville (Ark.) parted for more than two weeks until the Hog's run was cut short. The only good thing about the Hogs was that our President didn't have the chipper day he might have.

Being a man of integrity I can admit when I'm wrong. I said the Bruzes would choke. Actually I said no more John Wooden and no banners in Pauley Pavilion. My hat is off to the boys from Boston.

Nice work Wheels, add that Wooden quote though.

Mark Smith

In what might be considered a UNC Final Four wake-up wake up call to the Wake Forest Demon Deacons, Wake Deacons guard Dricus Bryan "Big H" was 10-of-16.

So if you have an upset next March about college basketball, Dan "The Man" knows the March Madman place.

Mark Vanderwall

With the rest of my colleagues and I going out on a limb and predicting the whole oralce publicly, I found myself feeling better than the rest.

I stated that the Arkansas vs. Virginia game would be the championship of the Midwest, as well as the tournament, and so far my theory holds true. I chose the Hogs to be dancing in the streets of Seattle by night's end, and by morning I'll know for sure that a repeat is in order, and I can relax until they win it again next season.

I have shown that this is my favorite team anything can happen. One of my best friends, who wrestled in high school, and is anything but a basketball jocky, radared those teams that danced in Seattle. If Arkansas wins tonight, he will also dance in our family's little pool. I have decided that needing means nothing, and he will flip a coin.

Damon Barkdoll

To say I was fared well with my NCAA picks would be an outright lie. All 5 of the remaining first round picks were put out by a freak act of nature. And 6 of my picks consist of insults from my colleagues. Of course my colleagues all went west until a big limb and picked the Bill Clinton Razorbacks, but hey, that's an American University pick so they blantly stated.

Therefore, here, in my own Final Four pick to make it, will win. I see no logic when I say this, and I pick the Dracons to win only because I love to hate the teams everyone follows.

Kevin Neufeld

"It could happen... so you better watch" would be an appropriate way to say the Arizona Wildcats. Uber. St. did an unpleasant farewell to Jud Heathcote and his boys as the Spartans during the first round which also saw the Florida Gators and Villanova exit early as well. The Pac-10 can like the likes of UCLA and Arizona State for providing my picks some sense of accomplishment on the first or second round to an already overrated conference.

Arkansas and UCLA survived the onslaught of the tournament underdogs vying for a chance in deciding the national champion to give Rancho California a chance to repeat as national champions or give UCLA its first title in two decades. The glitz and glamour of March Madness and the Final Four has come to an end, and the boys have me counting down the days until it starts all over again.

Precisely, 346 days, 18 hours and 38 minutes until tip-off of next year's first round.

Beepers a start, but not enough

She's sitting at a desk in the library, alone, with three separate binders stacked around her. Her hair is a monochrome brown, and her eyes of the same color are tired. Her mind is tired too, and she is ready to give up studying, but she works on. It is only ten o'clock.

By the clock on the wall says it's five to midnight she closes her books and winds her way to the checkout desk.

"Can I get one of those beepers, too?" she asks the desk clerk.

The desk clerk gets one for her, punches a few keys on the computer, and says, "Do you know how to use it?"

"Yes. You pull the pin and it goes off like a grenade. Then the cavalry comes to save me," she says, flashing a smile. She heaves her backpack onto her shoulders and heads for home on the other side of campus. Her mind is on what she studied earlier—it won't go away and another idea for her project is turning around in her head.

She walks by a dark patch of bushes, and reprimands herself for getting too close. She pulls her jacket around her and hugs herself along. A black cloud moves in front of the moon, making the cool night seem cold. She cuts across a lawn between two buildings. A light on the side of one buzzes and spits fitfully, but doesn't illuminate much more than a blind sigh when the wind is coming against the smoke of a cigarette. The orange glow doesn't move, and she says nothing. Her path will take her no more than ten feet away at the farthest—unless she turns around. She continues on.

He flicks the lit cigarette into her path and crushes it knuckled ones. She freezes and looks at him. He looks at her.

He takes a step toward her and... what? Rushes her, throws her to the ground, stumps on her beeper, rapes her, kicks her a time or two when he's run off when her 107-decibel beeper shatters the night air? Alone in the dark her beeper is a small shield and now she knows it.

The ASUI Safety Task Force will have ten personal beepers with them. They'll place them out at the UI Library by any student, male or female, starting Monday. The beepers represent a serious step forward for the safety of this campus, but it's important to remember they are just the beginning and that is the point of this editorial. Kat Tivoli, Safety Task Force chairperson, said they are excited about acquiring the beepers, but they plan to do more, including placing beepers at other campus locations. Tivoli said the task force hopes to get emergency phones placed all over campus, but anticipates it will probably take two to five years to get them.

In that two to five years students will be walking the campus at night with beepers that will placate some minds who believe it is dangerous to walk, the campus after midnight some night, alone. Pack some books and a beeper. You won't be safe.

Specter gives moderates the chance to fight back

Moderate rejoice. We finally have someone in the Republican Party who has his ear attuned to the political needs of the American average. Sen. Arlen Specter has announced his support for the pro-choice Republican Party Presidential nomination of George Bush. He is offering the GOP an unprecedented chance to reach moderates, Republicans, Democrats and independents.

Specter is a breath of fresh air (wheezing only slightly away) and is posing an open challenge to the conservative coalition (Patriots and Reds) by the Christian right. If you remember when the conservative coalition lost in 1992 by one vote, you remember that it was the Christian right ideologies led by Pat Buchanan who took over the convention and helped to lead to a Republican defeat in 1992 by only one vote. The year before was a vote Democratic.

Specter, known for his fiscal conservative and hasn't been in Washington nearly as long as Bob Dole (who has been in there since Eisenhower was president), he supports a flat tax and wants to reform the Republican Party. This last idea of his is essential to the survival of the GOP. Specter was quoted in Friday's Spokesman-Review as saying, "There are those in the White House who would... question the absolute notion that the Republican political capital is to pursue a radical social agenda." Bingo. The religious right will, if they manage to garner more power in the Republican Party, legislate their ideas of morality and scramble the most of the American population with new laws based on Christian theology. That's the religious right is a bad thing to begin with. There are many ethical concepts I agree with. But everyone in America is Christian, and Christians-based laws will be for the benefit of all Americans and would fare strongly in the next election. Amen to the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights League and the ACLU. The majority of the Republican party supports a pro-choice stance and the difference is that many of those people want limits placed on abortion in cases where it is not the right to choose—as such limits on the amount of money a woman can have an abortion. Limiting abortion to that time period of "Viability"—where the fetus is capable of staying alive outside of the womb—is a sensible measure. According to the March 20 issue of National Review, most pro-choice babies born 24 weeks after conception—and some as young as 20 weeks—can survive outside the womb. Following a few common-sense guidelines for abortions is not insensible, despite the claims of the far left that it will lead us down the perilous path of returning to the days when women didn't have a say about reproduction.

Which leads me to another target of opportunity here—the Pope. In last Friday's edition of the Spokesman-Review (can you tell I read this paper a lot?), Pope John Paul II "condemns all forms of abortion and euthanasia," the death penalty and the use of contraceptives as an element which are "create a world of violence."

This is the Pope! He lives with many Americans' beliefs, I don't know what is. Of course, I don't think the Pope is all that concerned about what people think as he is with what he believes his god thinks. But I'm having a hard time following the logic which says the use of contraceptives helps to create more violence.

Anyone who has taken a basic psychology course knows that rats, when faced with an overcrowded world, will murder their fellow rats. Apply this finding to a world where human population is growing at an alarming rate and compare the murder rates in inner cities to that of rural or suburban areas. Overpopulation leads to violence, ergo, widespread use of contraceptives and family planning would probably save lives—not destroy them.

But the Pope's rationale is indicative of what I have been writing in this column about—right. They're not concerned about logic or allowing common sense to guide them in the formation of new laws. They're concerned about legislation which they passed 2,000 years ago, despite evidence that some of those concepts just won't work in today's world.

They also know they run the risk of a violation of their privacy if they give out too much personal information. In fact, I often wonder before telling the world their names, violations of privacy would be almost inevitable.

Censoring the Internet would be like censoring the magazine industry and newspapers all at once. To have a small group of people decide which groups a paying user can subscribe to and actually to be like telling an adult what to read.

Fine because people find the word "nigger" offensive. Of course it is a socially offensive word, with the proper context, it can teach about race relations within the proper context, set by parents, not by the government, the Internet can be a great source of education to kids and adults as well.

What is even more worrisome is the amount of research it took to find any information about anything on this bill or its consequences. There is a petition being circulated on the net. The general user of the net is unaware of this bill or its consequences. There is a petition being circulated on the net. The general user of the net is unaware of this bill or its consequences. There is a petition being circulated on the net. The general user of the net is aware of this bill or its consequences.

If you want to preserve the Internet, you must take action now—before it's too late. Read e-mail Socials, free speech, e-mail 3514-pelikut, it is to type the word "signature," follow it with your name, your e-mail address, your State, and then the words "Are you a U.S. Citizen?" with a "Yes" or "No."

Jennifer Swift

Surfing the Net with censorship

The US government and major companies have struck again. This time, it is in the form of the Communications Decency Act of 1995. This is basically an amended version of the Communications Decency Act of 1996 to include "digital communications" as a type of communications service.

What it means in plain English is censorship of the Internet. Providers of Internet services would be allowed to block substantial offensive, harmful and bulleted lists that they find offensive. The problem with that system is that system administrators find offensive could be completely different than what they find offensive and who they are. By denying access to these groups, they are censoring information to the general public. What if I find offensive may not be what you find offensive and who you are? There is no way to decide this without excluding someone's opinion.

Most users of the Internet we conversation and say and who we say it in front of. There are places to get on the net for sex, illegal material, and it is generally stays in those places. There is nothing wrong with people over the boundaries, but we are assaulted every day by things that are illegal. If it is not the be someone's language or a magazine.

This censorship battle cry was sparked by a couple incidents. The first was a man accused of solicitating young kids on the net. In the first place, parents need to be aware of which newsgroups or bulletin boards they have access to reading. Secondly, this is a rare occasion that we need to stop people from saying what they think in the appropriate forum because of the law. But everyone should be a group that addresses such issues such as methods of suicide. If someone posts to that group, is anyone obligated to follow-up and check on the mental well-being of the poster? That is a sticky question, but if people do not feel free to ask these questions and subscribe to these groups, then we run the risk of missing what makes the Internet so unique.

Anyone who has cruised groups or out newsgroups knows there are some strange people out there. A person who is looking for, but doesn't know, who or what. It is like looking for a needle in a haystack. It is just a matter of time before someone will find it.
